It has come to my attention that this regained popularity in recent weeks. As the author, I'm deeply humbled by the support in the form of reblogs and likes even despite the crass language. I'm not Lakota or from the areas of these tribes. I'm from a Pueblo in New Mexico (shout-out to the Pueblo camp at standing Rock!) And Navajo Nation. I made this post at s tumultuous time in my life when I had accrued so much capital and privilege in the white man's world. Back when these were working links, I was a community organizer that went into a post traumatic stress disorder episode while this post was getting popular 2 years ago when Standing Rock was still at camp. I ask folks to reblog this out of respect to the many people and messages passed that allows for campaigns like these to exist. I'll never know how much was raised but know that y'all were a part of something huge and important. That two years is not a long time and progress is like watching grass grow.

Let's have you, lazy Daisy?

You know, that you're a cabbage head.

Maybe.

You look like a total turnip-head.

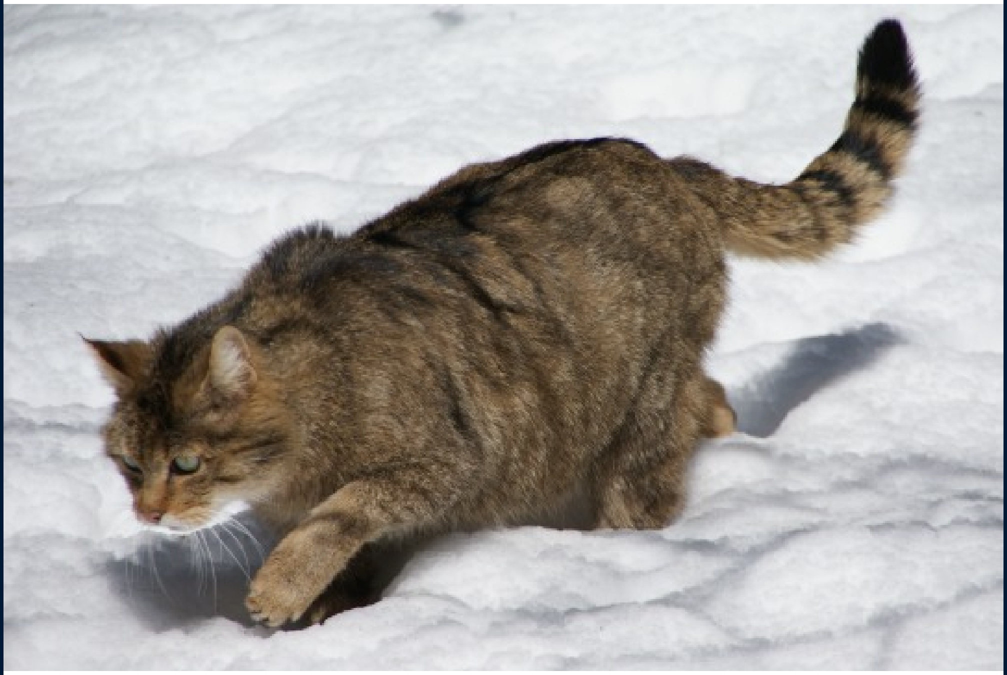
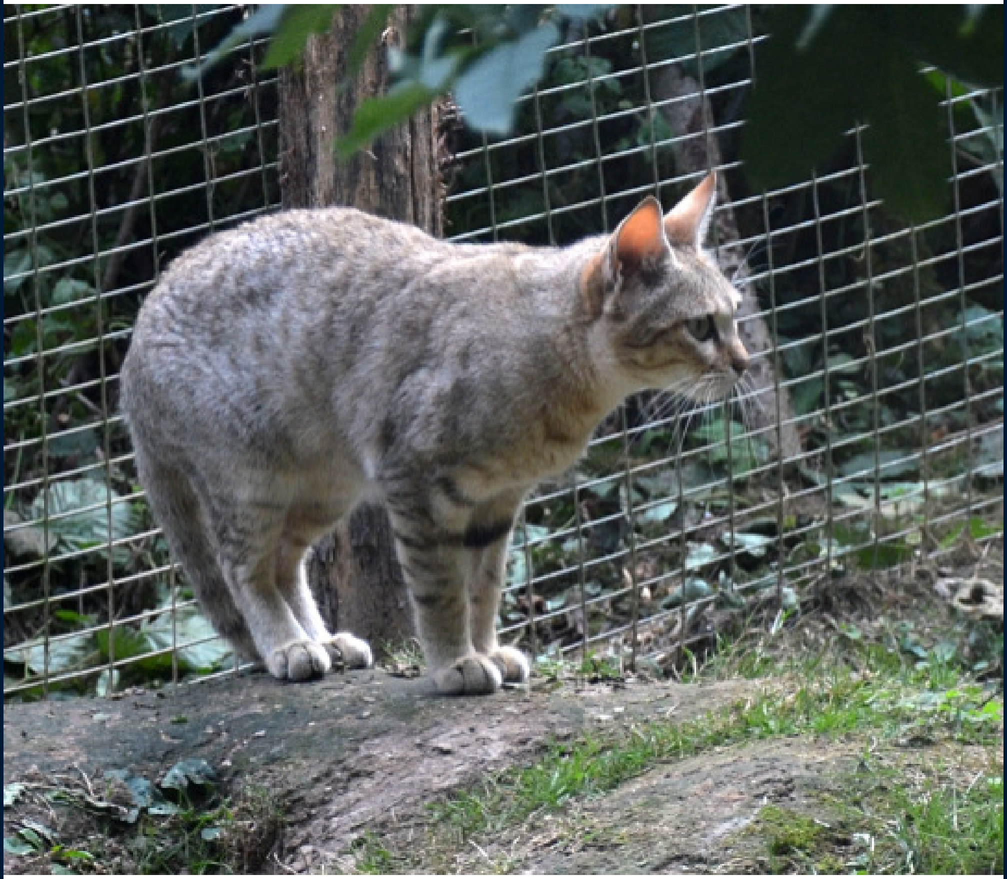
Wild Cats That Look Like Domestic Cats!

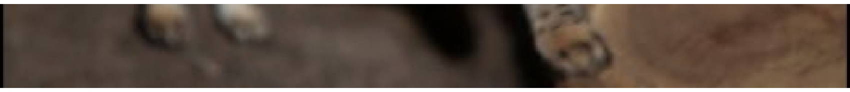
European wild cat (Felis silvestris), sometimes erroneously listed as the ancestor of the domestic cat:



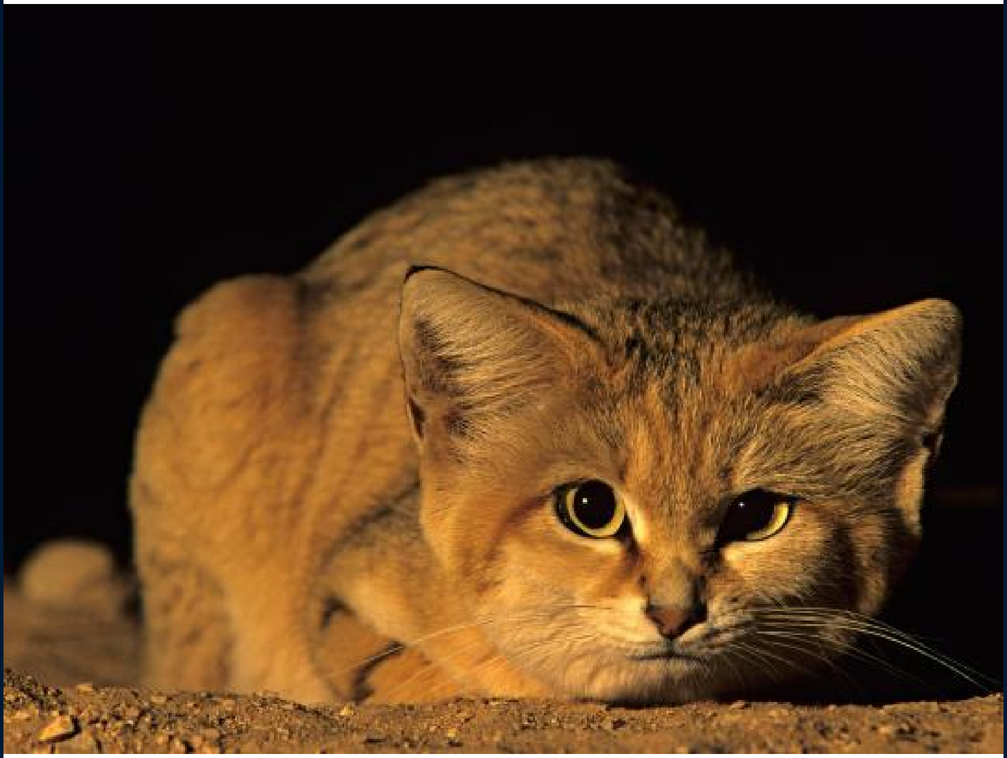
African wild cat (Felis lybica), the actual ancestor of the domestic cat:

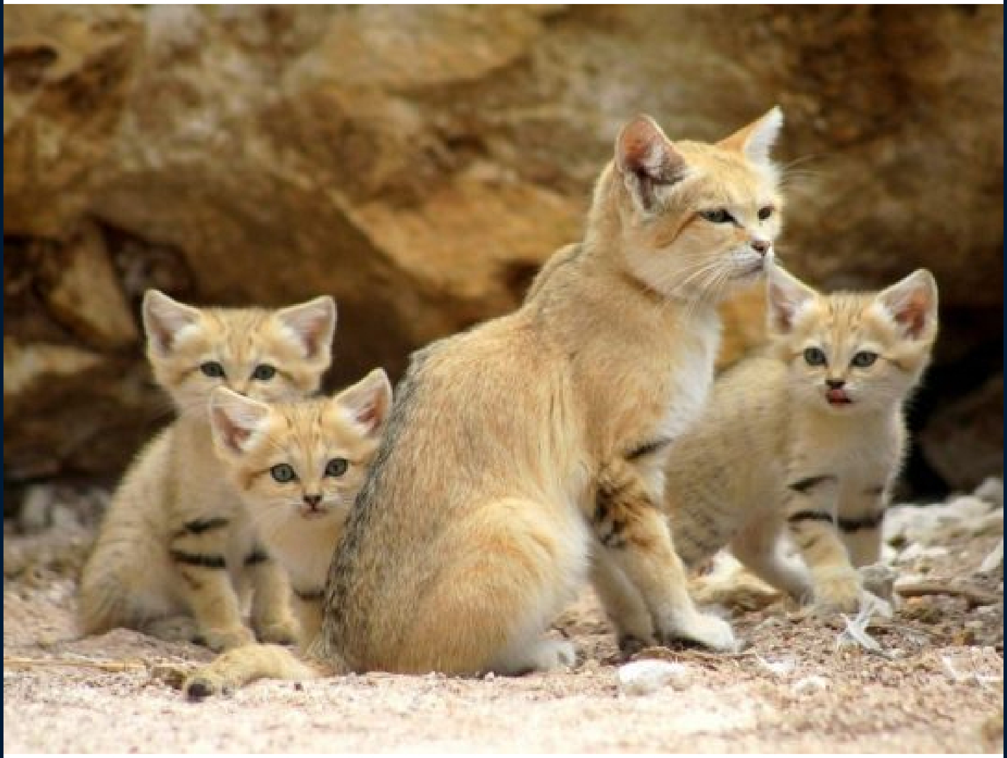


Black-footed cat (Felis nigripes), it may be cute and very small but it has a 60% success rate when it comes to hunting, which is more than any other cat:



Sand cat (Felis margarita), this is kind of loose, as they're basically the Felid version of the fennec fox:





Chinese mountain cat (Felis bieti):

EDIT: Adding a couple more here.

Southern tigrina/tiger cat/southern oncilla (Leopardus guttula), once thought to be the same species as the oncilla pictured further down, but nope! Different species entirely, and it turns out we know more about this one than the og:

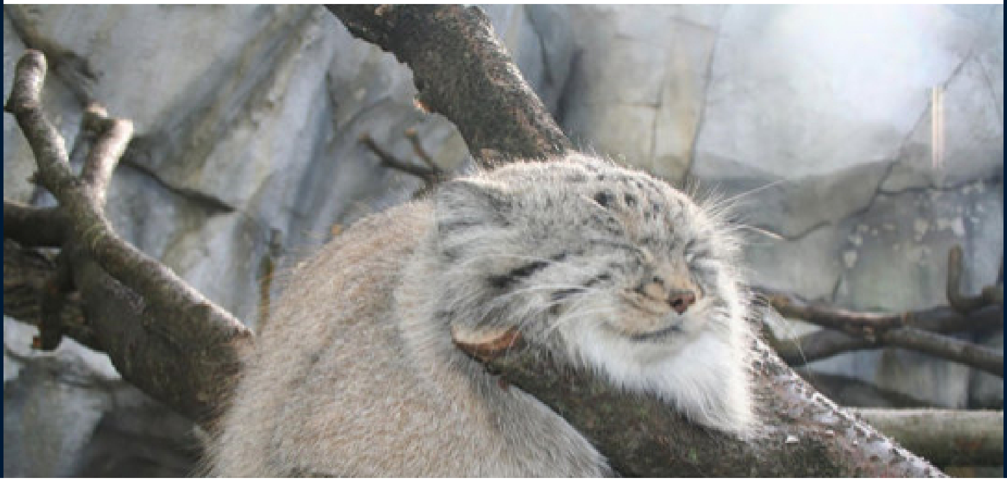
© Projeto Gatos do Mato - Brasil

Manul/Pallas cat (Otocolobus manul), I didn't initially include these guys because they're so distinctive, but it's come to my attention that someone has indeed mistaken one for a housecat and raised it as one:



Jungle cat (Felis chaus), the largest member of the genus Felis, and a fair size larger than a housecat, which is why I hadn't included it. But if someone didn't know what it was they'd probably think it was just a large breed of housecat:

the day that tumblr learns that it isn’t progressive whatsoever to shame people for being attracted to men is the day the world heals. there’s nothing progressive about shaming gay and bisexual men using homophobic tactics and spreading biphobia toward bisexual women.

shopkin Follow

you know what? shaming straight women for liking men isn’t cute either. i genuinely hope that every straight girl has a fulfilling and happy relationship. when you put the blame on women for even dating “grrr evil men” in the first place you ignore the amount of abuse that women face in relationships and you excuse the men who are misogynistic and pieces of shit by emphasizing the idea that it’s normal for men to treat women like garbage.

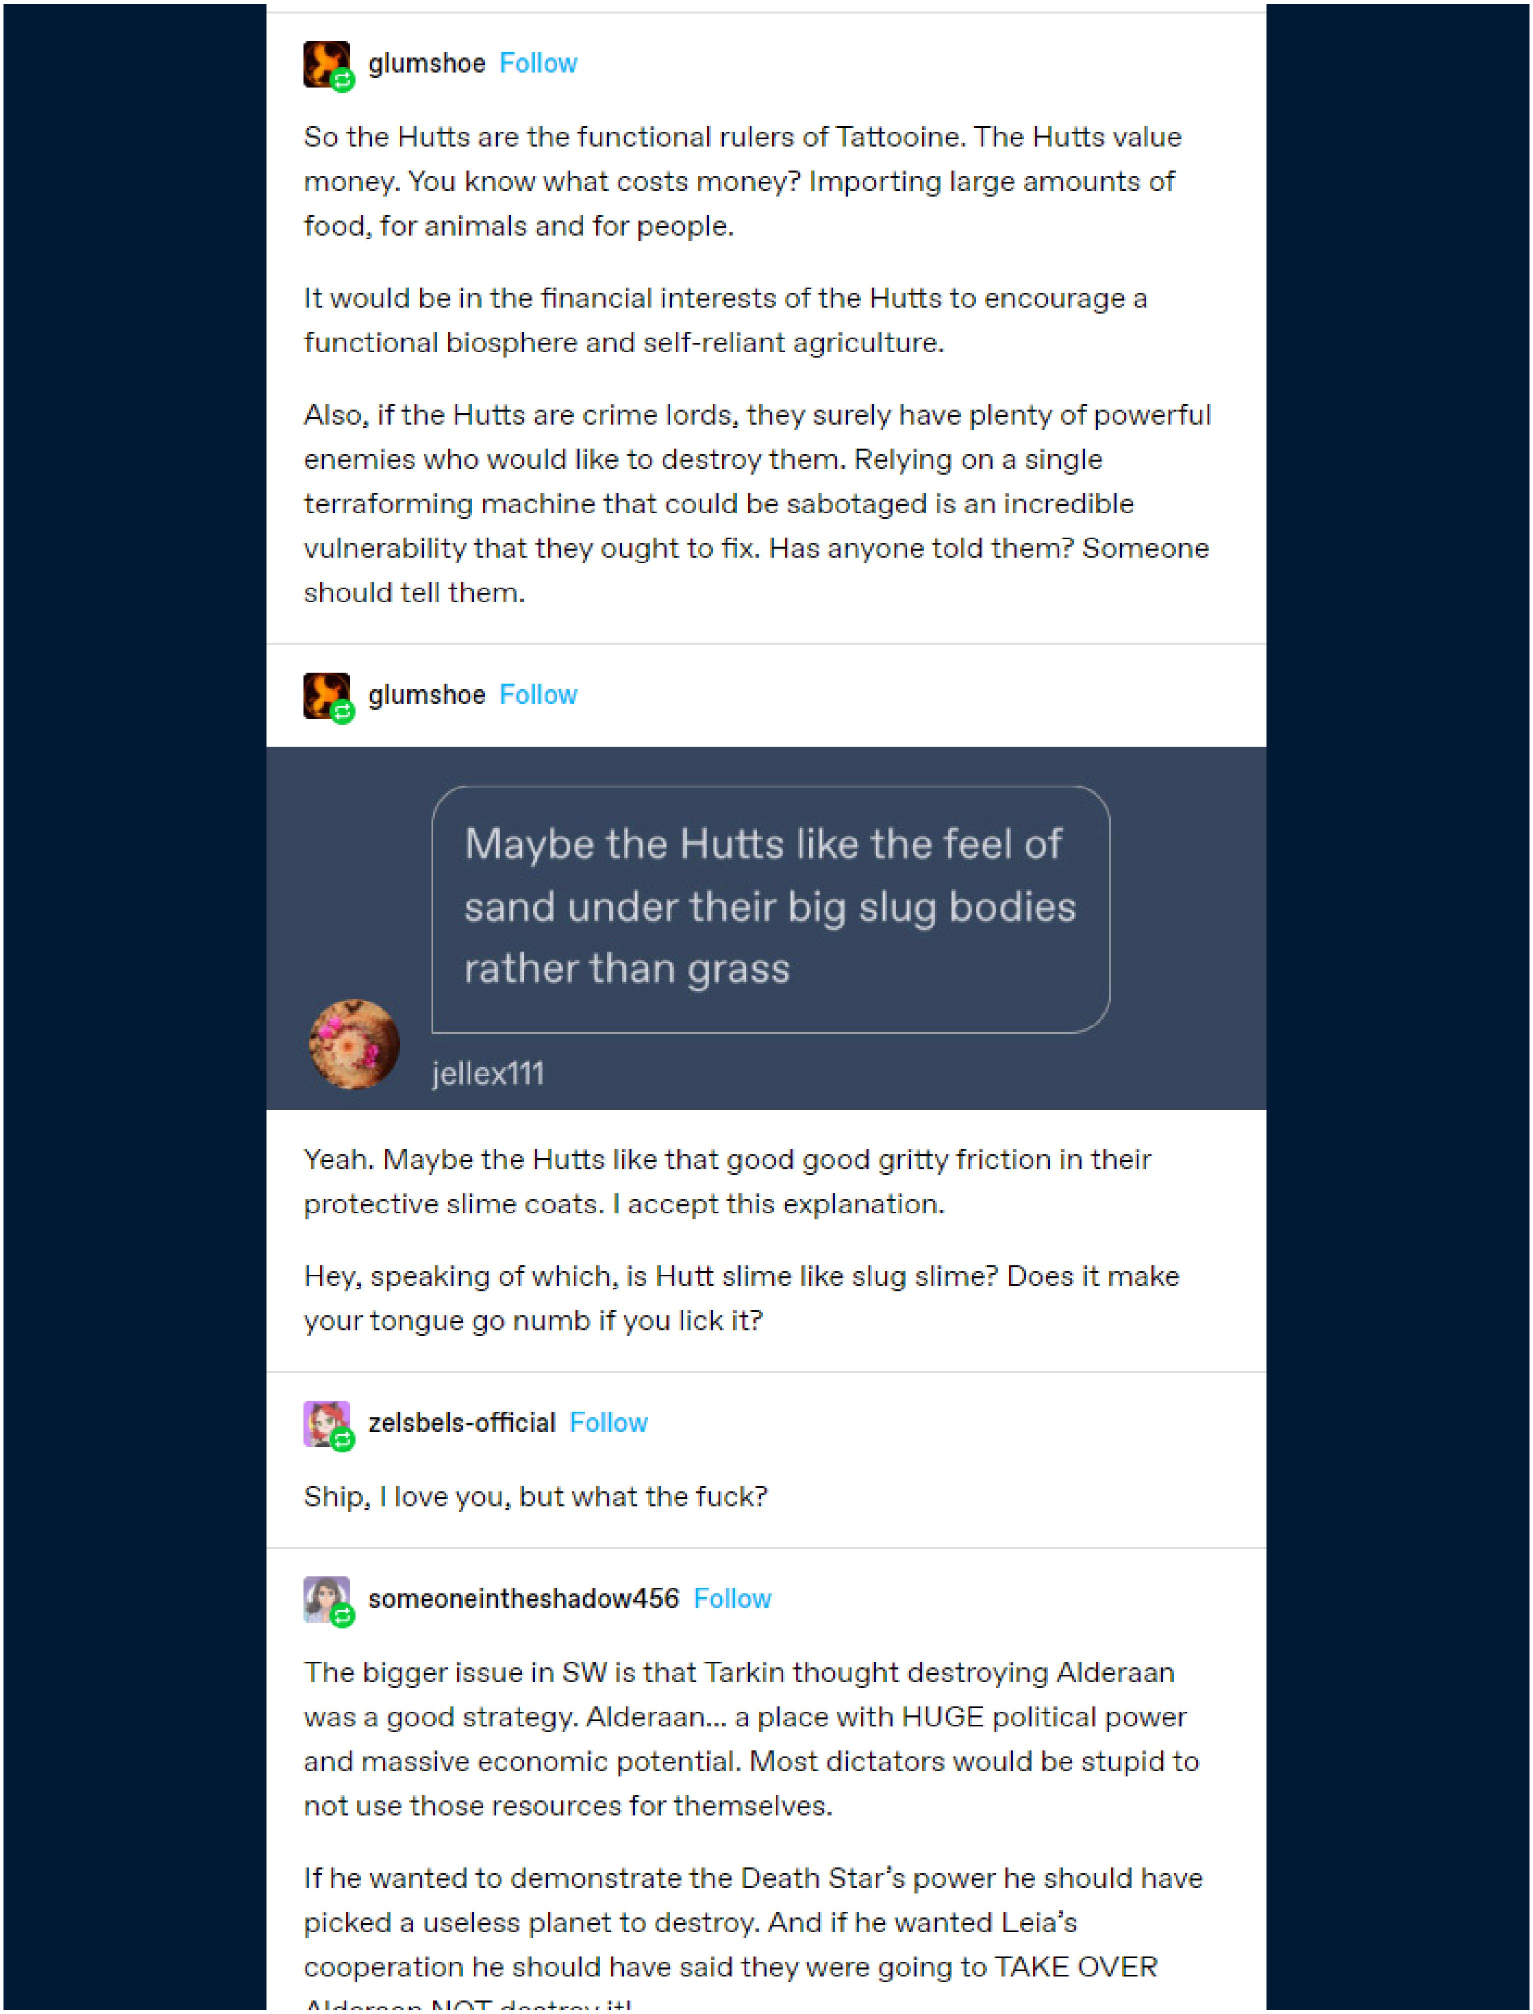
If Kotor is canon, a busted terraforming machine older than the Republic is creating all the life-giving stuff.

montgomeryzuma

How old is the republic? Because I think there's been more than enough time to, I don't know, import some drought-tolerant space prairie grass... some vegetation with sand-stabilizing roots... they've got plenty of large (apparently) herbivores whose feed they're probably importing. Their waste could be turned into fertilizer for small-scale terraforming efforts. If they're importing fucking sarlaccs then surely they can spring for some fucking hardy seed mixes...

someguyiguess Follow

tatooine is ruled mostly by it would seem the crime lords and the sand peoples, the former of which have no incentive to improve the conditions of the planet and the latter of which have no means to do so, and the citizenry is for the most part too sparse to do anything about any of it.



glumshoe Follow

So the Hutts are the functional rulers of Tattooine. The Hutts value money. You know what costs money? Importing large amounts of food, for animals and for people.

It would be in the financial interests of the Hutts to encourage a functional biosphere and self-reliant agriculture.

Also, if the Hutts are crime lords, they surely have plenty of powerful enemies who would like to destroy them. Relying on a single terraforming machine that could be sabotaged is an incredible vulnerability that they ought to fix. Has anyone told them? Someone should tell them.

glumshoe Follow

The bigger issue in SW is that Tarkin thought destroying Alderaan was a good strategy. Alderaan... a place with HUGE political power and massive economic potential. Most dictators would be stupid to not use those resources for themselves.

If he wanted to demonstrate the Death Star's power he should have picked a useless planet to destroy. And if he wanted Leia's cooperation he should have said they were going to TAKE OVER Alderaan NOT destroy it!

Alderaan NOT destroy it!

Good Omens, also, got very minimal backlash even for being a complete twist on the Christian mythos and even including what is very arguably a same-gender romance between an angel and a demon and a ton of other very 'blasphemous' shit. You know why that show didn't get as much backlash from conservatives as a 3 minute music video by a musician? Exactly, because the main two actors were white and the book was written by a white man.

Lil Nas X getting backlash for his song is absolutely about race bc I've seen so many retellings and manglings of Christian belief that got off mostly scott free from religious fanatics, because they weren't made by PoC.

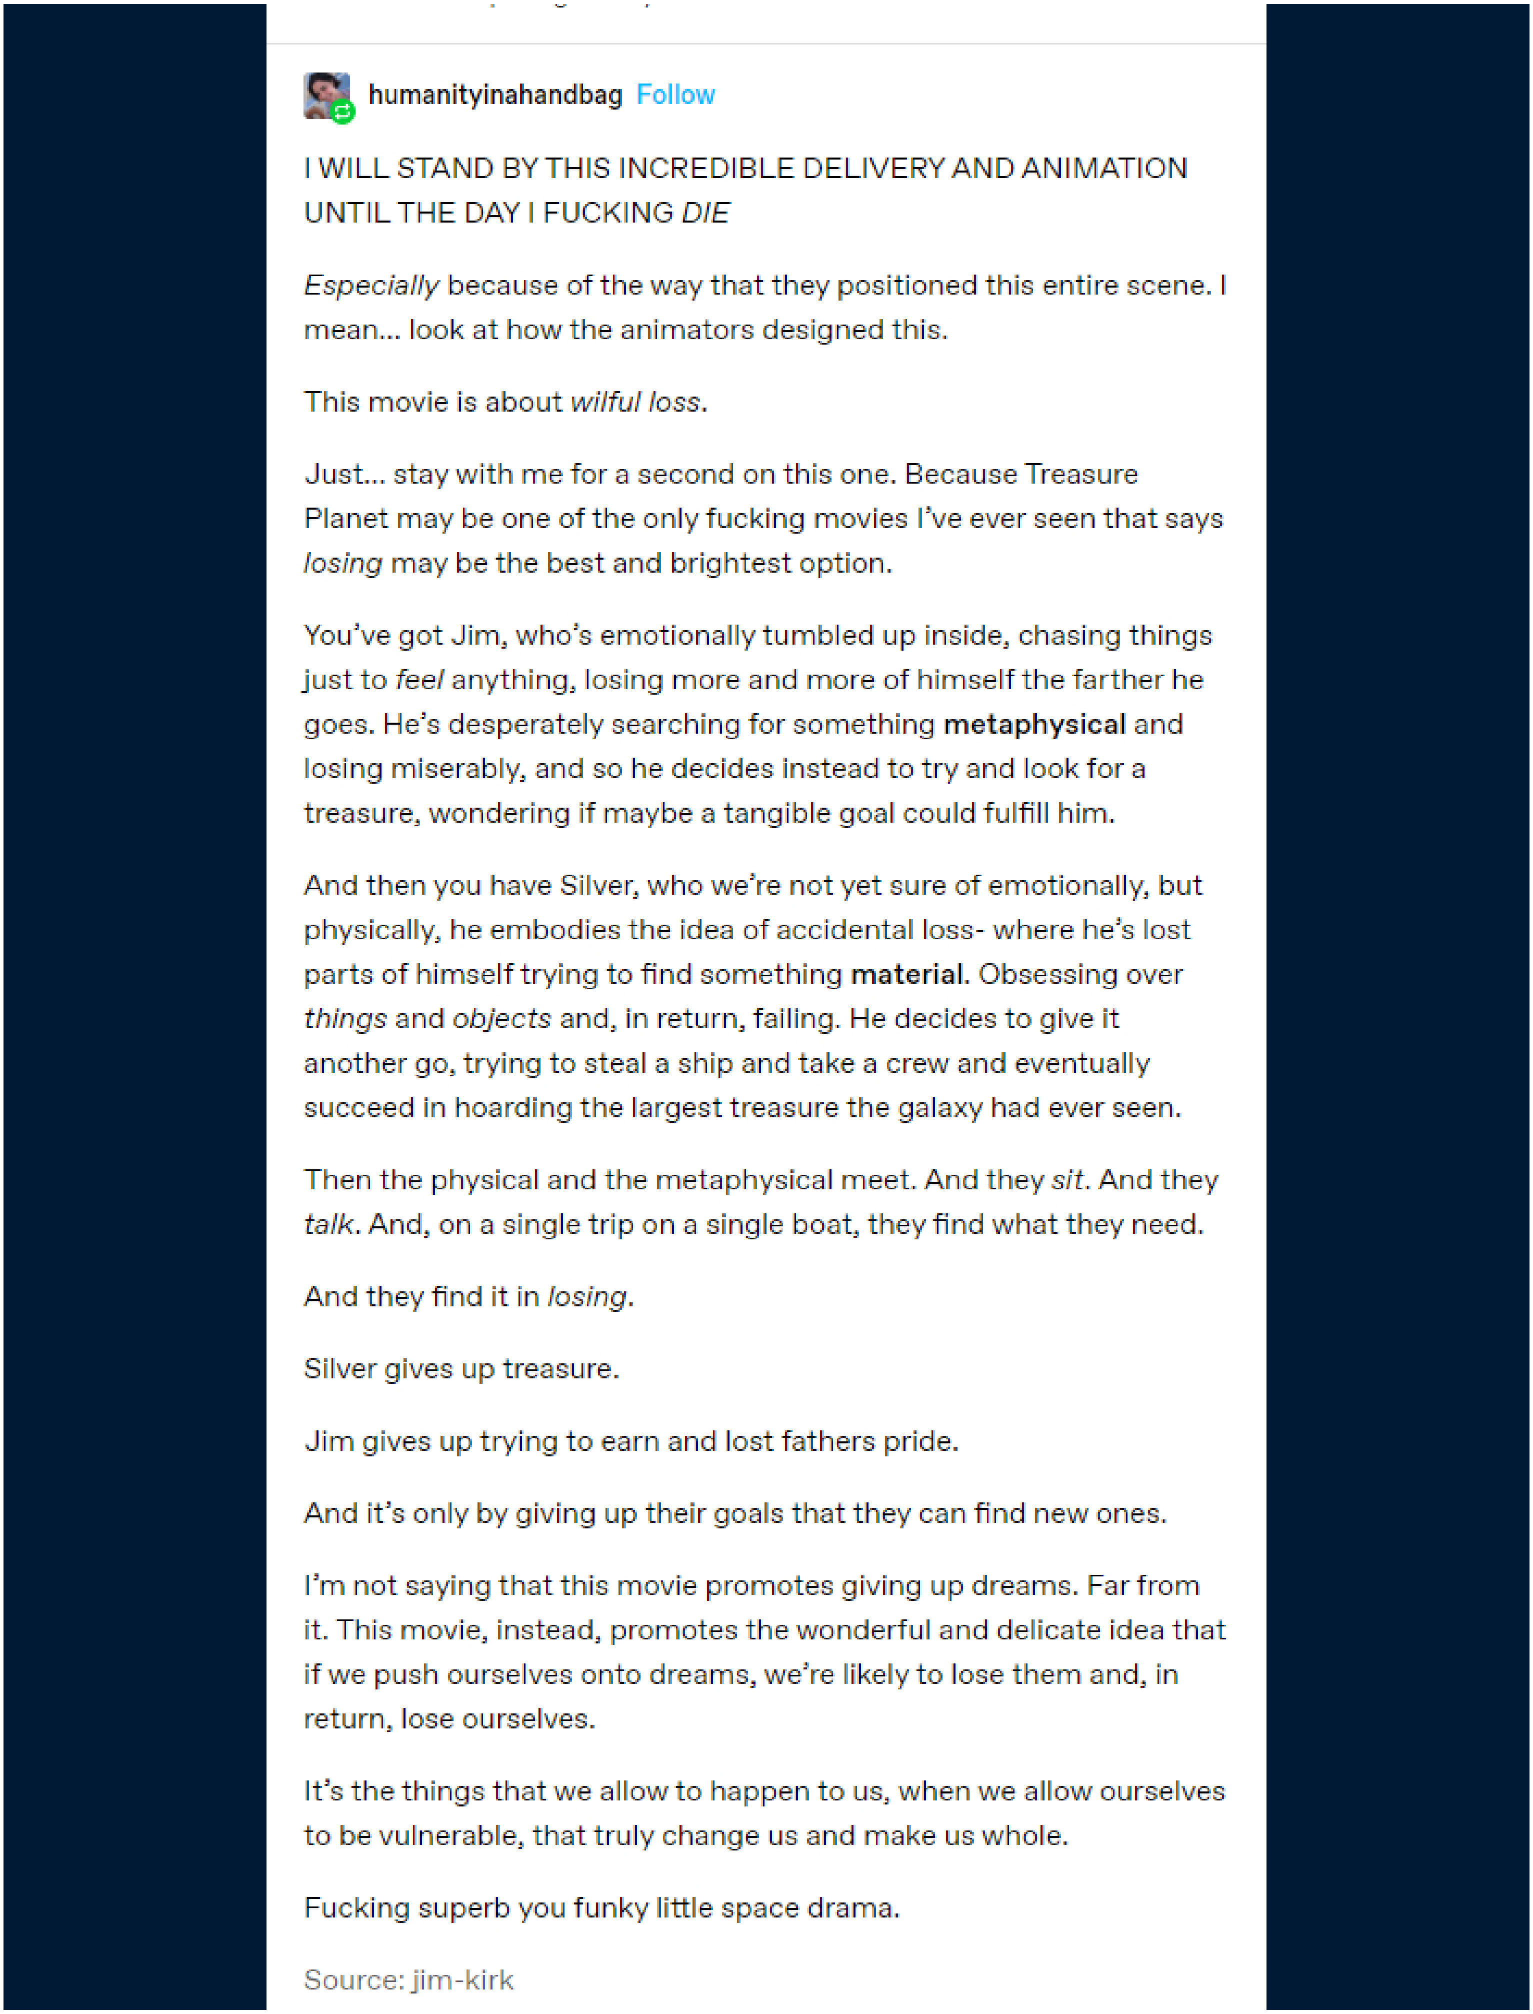
Oh. Sometimes...plans go astray.



humanityinahandbag

I WILL STAND BY THIS INCREDIBLE DELIVERY AND ANIMATION UNTIL THE DAY I FUCKING DIE

Especially because of the way that they positioned this entire scene. I mean… look at how the animators designed this.

This movie is about wilful loss.

Just… stay with me for a second on this one. Because Treasure Planet may be one of the only fucking movies I've ever seen that says losing may be the best and brightest option.

You've got Jim, who's emotionally tumbled up inside, chasing things just to feel anything, losing more and more of himself the farther he goes. He's desperately searching for something metaphysical and losing miserably, and so he decides instead to try and look for a treasure, wondering if maybe a tangible goal could fulfill him.

And then you have Silver, who we're not yet sure of emotionally, but physically, he embodies the idea of accidental loss- where he's lost parts of himself trying to find something material. Obsessing over things and objects and, in return, failing. He decides to give it another go, trying to steal a ship and take a crew and eventually succeed in hoarding the largest treasure the galaxy had ever seen.

Then the physical and the metaphysical meet. And they sit. And they talk. And, on a single trip on a single boat, they find what they need.

And they find it in losing.

Silver gives up treasure.

Jim gives up trying to earn and lost fathers pride.

And it's only by giving up their goals that they can find new ones.

I'm not saying that this movie promotes giving up dreams. Far from it. This movie, instead, promotes the wonderful and delicate idea that if we push ourselves onto dreams, we're likely to lose them and, in return, lose ourselves.

It's the things that we allow to happen to us, when we allow ourselves to be vulnerable, that truly change us and make us whole.

Fucking superb you funky little space drama.

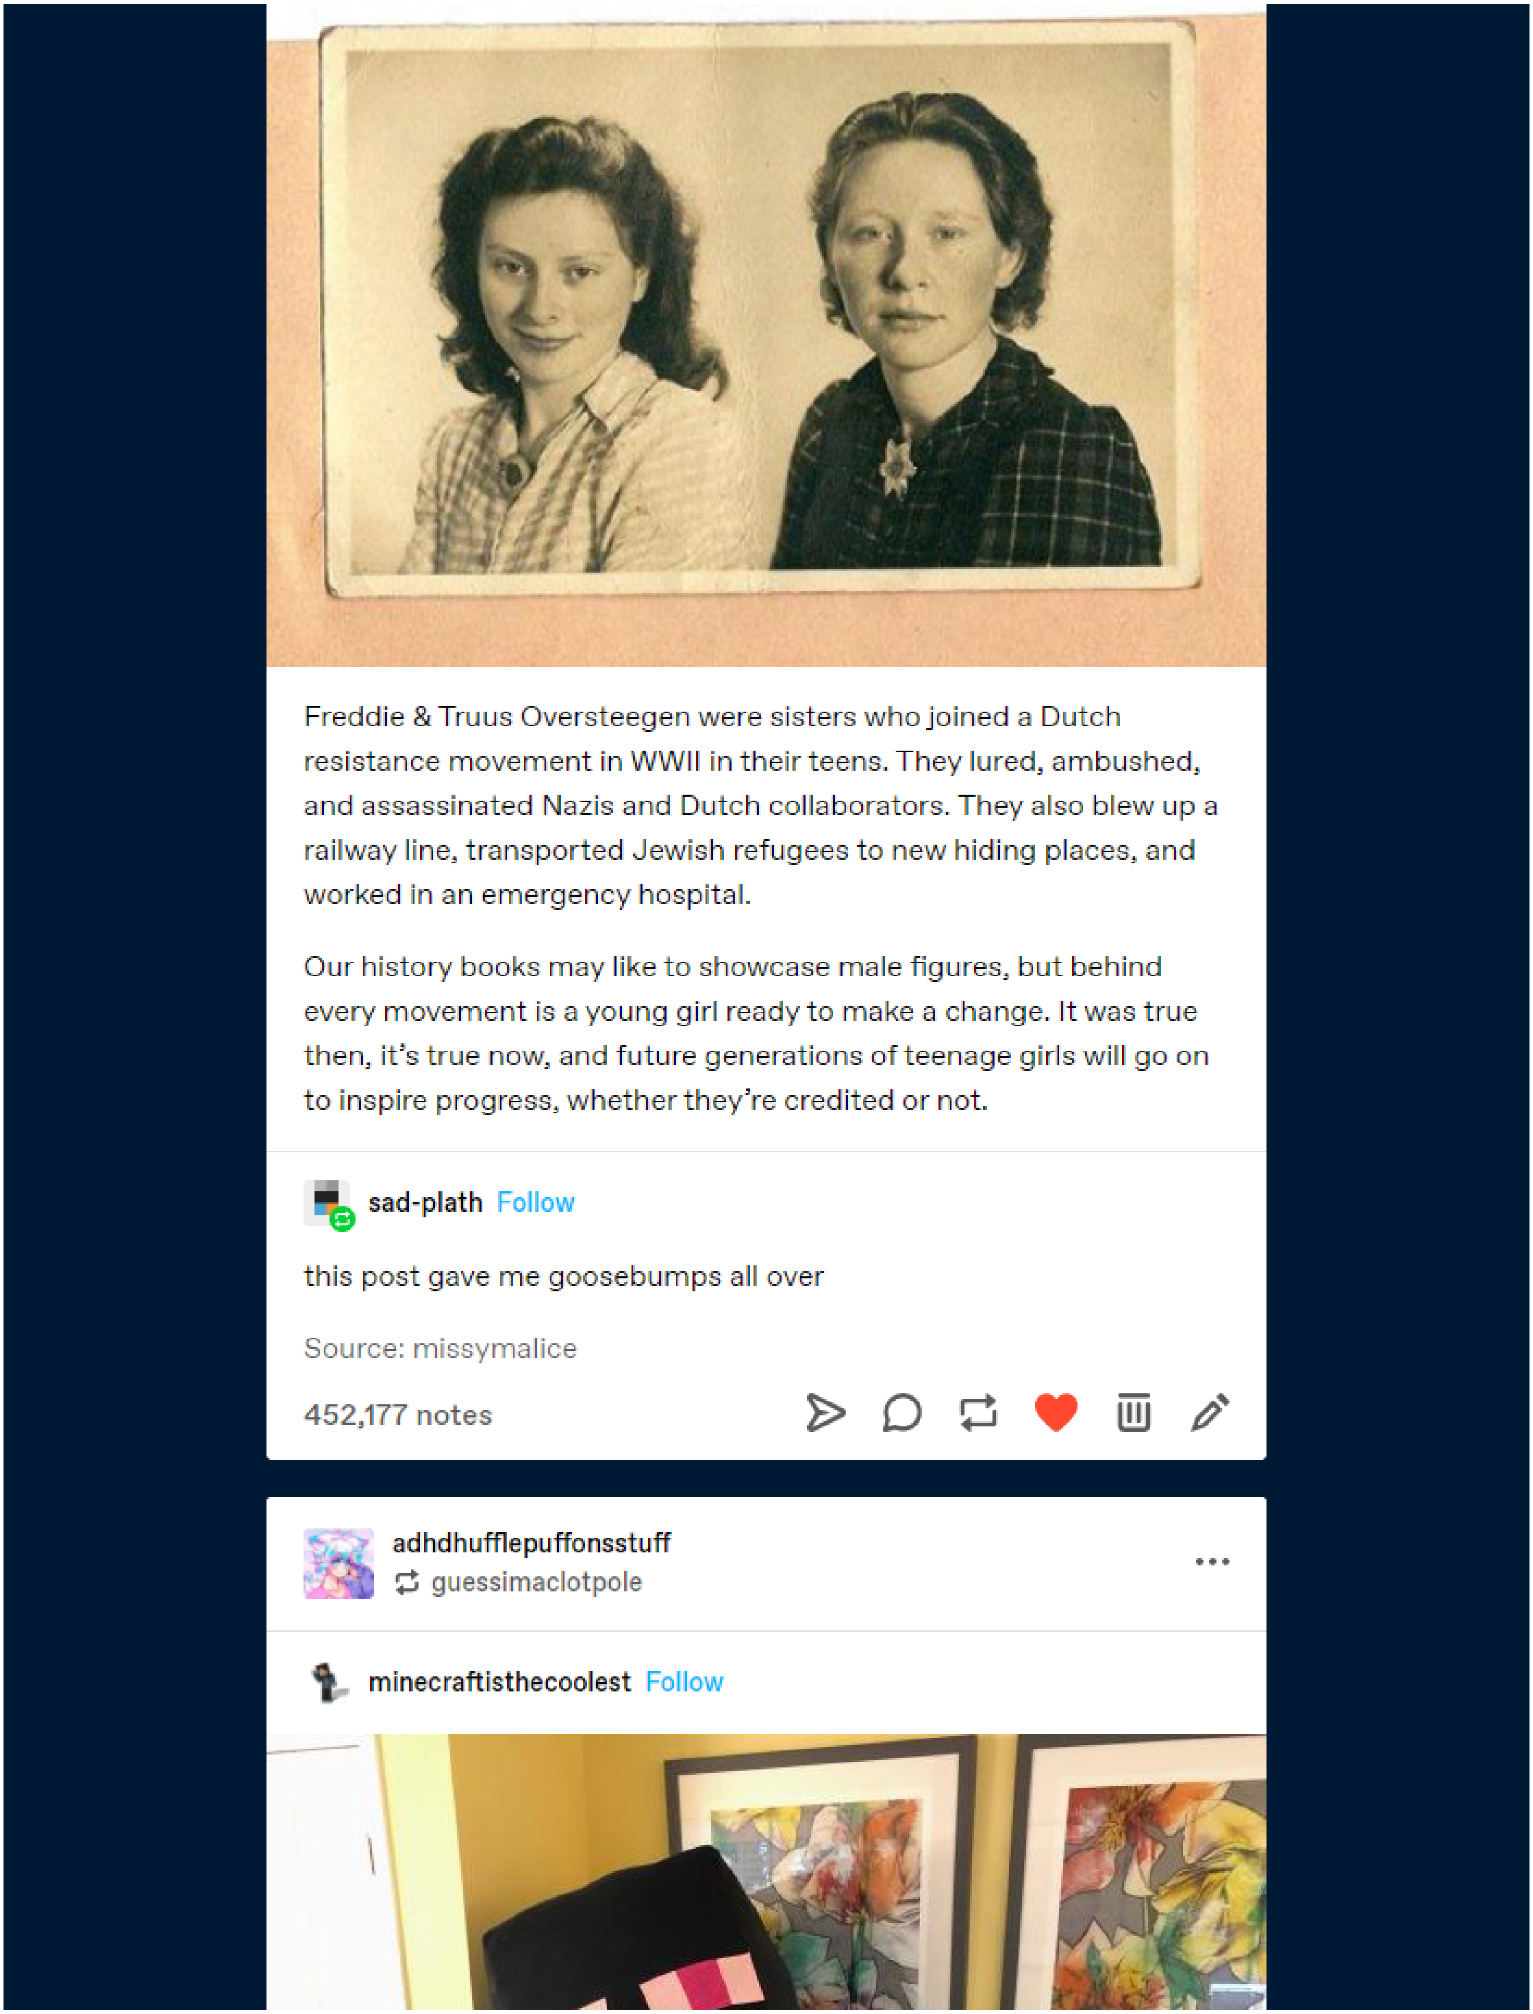
This isn't a coincidence. Revolutions almost always happen when the population of a country is at its youngest and that's a lot more true nowadays with social media.

2am-theswifthour Follow

Claudette Colvin was actually the first one to refuse her seat in Montgomery, Alabama to a white passenger. The movement chose to promote Rosa Parks as the figure for that form of protest because Claudette was a pregnant 15-year-old girl.

Barbara Rose Johns was a 16-year-old who organized a student strike protesting segregated schools. This strike, after gaining support of the NAACP, became a lawsuit that turned into Brown vs. The Board of Education and resulted in the desegregation of U.S schools nationally.

7th-grader Mary Beth Tinker, disturbed by the Vietnam War, decided to wear an arm band with a peace sign on it in protest. Her school suspended her. Her family filed a suit, Tinker vs. Des Moines, which reached the Supreme Court and ruled in her favor, ensuring that students and teachers maintain their right to free speech while in school.



Freddie & Truus Oversteegen were sisters who joined a Dutch resistance movement in WWII in their teens. They lured, ambushed, and assassinated Nazis and Dutch collaborators. They also blew up a railway line, transported Jewish refugees to new hiding places, and worked in an emergency hospital.

Our history books may like to showcase male figures, but behind every movement is a young girl ready to make a change. It was true then, it’s true now, and future generations of teenage girls will go on to inspire progress, whether they’re credited or not.

Landarico (Sephardic song in Haketia)

Landarico is a popular ballad that is sung all around Europe. Jewish people also sing this tragic story adapted to their language, in this case Haketia. In the story, Landarico (Andarleto, Andarlino etc) is the lover of the Queen. The King goes to greet his wife in the morning. She is combing her hair in front of the mirror and, not realizing it was the King and thinking that it must be her lover, greets him with the name Landarico. She tells him that the sons she has with him give her a happier life than the ones she has with the King. When she realizes that she is talking with her husband, the King, she says "Oh, I am sorry, I was dreaming" or, in the Moroccan version, "I was crazy for a few moments". In a version from Spain, she says to the King "well, kill me, already". The response of the King? In the version from Spain, he doesn't kill her, but locks her in a tower with horse's urine to drink. In the version from Turkey, the King often says, "I forgive you, with the korolado yards" (a red collar), meaning he cuts her head off. In the Moroccan version, he cuts her tongue out.

Just a tip!

If you're in a place, mentally or physically, where you only have the spoons to take care of yourself in one way, I HIGHLY recommend taking care of your teeth.

Acne goes away. You can always start working out later. Stink is easily fixed with a single shower. Hair can be brushed and cut.

Issues with teeth are expensive, painful, and overall suck. Your teeth health can have an impact on other things, too, like jaw issues.

If you're faced with the choice of either taking a shower or brushing your teeth, I highly recommend brushing your teeth. Whatever tools help you to do that, disposable floss picks/toothbrushes, kids fun-flavored toothpaste, soft bristled brushes, anything is better than nothing.

We don't talk enough about the systemic health effects of casual fatphobia and how much they fucking skew the data to the point where we literally cannot know how much outcomes are actually related to fatness and how much they are related to society not being designed for fat people, like literal design.

My best friend cannot find a bra.

She's fat. We won't get into the ~why~ here because it honestly wouldn't matter whether it was "all her fault" or whether it was a result of outside forces like genes and such, she still deserves a goddamn fucking bra that fits.

And she cannot find a bra.

She's short and fat, and Fat Bras are usually full cup, but because she's short the full cups are usually too tall, or the armbands around them are too tall, to the point where what'll fit around her chest and over her boobs will also dig up into her arms or have such high coverage that she literally cannot wear a shirt with a neckline high enough. Any bra that goes out enough goes too high.

This affects her ability to find clothing, impacting her ability to go outside sometimes, because she has this tiny selection of bras and she constantly has to wash them and when they're gone she has no idea when she'll next be able to find another unicorn bra. They appear in a flash usually in startups that die soon after, and COVID has killed most the small businesses remaining where she had even a hint of a chance of finding a fitting bra.

So she wears bras that don't fit. Or she doesn't leave the house. One gives her back pain. The other is, obviously, not very active. She likes to be active.

If she brings it up, people suggest breast reduction surgery.

But the thing is, with a good bra, she does not get back pain.

But if it's that hard to find a good bra, they say, wouldn't a reduction just be easier?

Wouldn't it be easier for you to chop off part of your flesh, they say, then for us to cut fabric and underwire to more sizes? As if that is normal. As if that isn't horrifying.

It's not just bras. It's chairs. It's benches. It's goddamn shoes. It's seatbelts. It's exercise equipment - I just got an exercise bike for Christmas. I had to shop around to find an affordable one that was also rated to take my level of fat. If I were 100 pounds heavier, which some people are? I don't think any equipment would have existed in a price range that any working person could expect to afford. I don't think most people even look at the weight ratings on chairs and couches and furniture. Once you start? They are lower than you think. There are absolutely 100% people you love in your life - whether really tall men or just average kinda overweight fat people - who should not be using the things they are using. Who are not getting support from their mattress, their footwear, their office chair. It might be you! You might be thinking "but I am average size!", but the amount of furniture out there that's only weighted to about 200lbs? Or 175??? It's SO MUCH MORE THAN YOU REALIZE. Get into the Proper Fat? The 350lb, 400lb, 500lb fat? There's virtually nothing.

Seatbelts are not tested for fat bodies and seatbelt extenders aren't regulated.

We know about the problems with too small a blood pressure cuff. With too low a medicine dose. With no MRI a really fat body can fit in for a thousand miles.

We know, from multiple studies on multiple oppressed communities, that social bias by itself, with zero other compounding factors, can give people worse health outcomes.

Now add up

+ one of the social biases with the least pushback even from the educated liberal set with

+ having a world that is literally not made for you. Where you cannot get clothes, furniture, or transportation in a way that will actually accommodate you,

+ where society is constantly blaming you for this. And even if you somehow (and if you know how, please tell me) manage to retain some sense of self worth and optimism and determination despite all that

+ that's not gonna magically give you access to the daily supplies a person needs in their home and out in public that'll make living safe and healthy life literally physically possible.

If you're really so concerned about fat people's health start a bra company. If you're really so concerned about fat people's health mandate changes to seatbelt requirements. If you're really so concerned about fat people's health have a variety of chairs in your waiting room with at least some being properly Fat Rated. If you're really so concerned about fat people's health, make it easier for fat people to be active by making exercise equipment that fits them, swimwear that'll actually stay on them, athletic shoes that can bear them. If you're really so concerned about fat people's health ask they be included in more medical trials. If you're really so concerned about fat people's health, promote fat visibility and fat people loving their bodies - because hating yourself has literally never been good for anyone's health.

If you're using "concern for health" as a shield to allow you to judge and criticize strangers, you don't give a fuck about anyone's health. You're just an asshole who prefers a veneer of respectability when you bully people. You're hateful and we can see right through you.

But fatphobia isn't just bullying. It isn't just judgment from strangers. It isn't just medical neglect and medical bias. Even if we could wave a wand and make all that go away, my best friend still wouldn't have a bra that fits, people still wouldn't have a chair that supports them, a seatbelt that protects them. It's literally engineered in. And it slowly kills people day by day by day.

tfw-adhd answered:

No, you don't have to have sensory issues to be diagnosed with ADHD, it's just something that most of us do have.

Although hating loud noises and spicy food does count!

I just checked to see if I have an ADHD & Anxiety diagram, and I don't have one that shows only their overlap - but I have this one, and you can just look at the ADHD & Anxiety sides of it. (It says there's no overlap because the only overlap the two disorders have is shared with the other one, which means that the entirety of their overlap is the centre of the diagram.)

How copyright filters lead to wage-theft

Last week, "Marina" - a piano teacher who publishes free lessons her Piano Keys Youtube channel - celebrated her fifth anniversary by announcing that she was quitting Youtube because her meager wages were being stolen by fraudsters.

https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=WcyOxtkafMs

Marina posted a video with a snatch of her performance of Beethoven's "Moonlight Sonata," published in 1801. The composition is firmly in the public domain, and the copyright in the performance is firmly Marina's, but it still triggered Youtube's automated copyright filter.

A corporate entity - identified only by an alphabet soup of initialisms and cryptic LLC names - had claimed Ole Ludwig Van's masterpiece as their own, identifying it as "Wicca Moonlight."

Content ID, the automated Youtube filter, flagged Marina's track as an unauthorized performance of this "Wicca Moonlight" track. Marina appealed the automated judgement, which triggered a message to this shadowy LLC asking if they agreed that no infringement had taken place.

But the LLC renewed its claim of infringement. Marina now faces several unpleasant choices:

1. She can allow the LLC to monetize her video, stealing the meager wages she receives from the ads that appear on it
2. She can take down her video
3. She can provide her full name and address to Youtube in order to escalate the claim, with the possibility that her attackers will get her contact details, and with the risk that if she loses her claim, she can lose her Youtube channel

The incident was a wake-up call for Marina, who is quitting Youtube altogether, noting that it has become a place that favors grifters over creators. She's not wrong, and it's worth looking at how that happened.

Content ID was created to mollify the entertainment industry after Google acquired Youtube. Google would spend $100m on filtering tech that would allow rightsholders to go beyond the simple "takedown" permitted by law, and instead share in revenues from creative uses.

But it's easy to see how this system could be abused. What if people falsely asserted copyright over works to which they had no claim? What if rightsholders rejected fair uses, especially criticism?

In a world where the ownership of creative works can take years to untangle in the courts and where judges' fair use rulings are impossible to predict in advance, how could Google hope to get it right, especially at the vast scale of Youtube?

The impossibility of automating copyright judgments didn't stop Google from trying to perfect its filter, adding layers of complexity until Content ID's appeal process turned into a cod-legal system whose flowchart looks like a bowl of spaghetti.

The resulting mess firmly favors attackers (wage stealers, fraudsters, censors, bullies) over defenders (creators, critics). Attackers don't need to waste their time making art, which leaves them with the surplus capacity to master the counterintuitive "legal" framework.

You can't fix a system broke by complexity by adding more complexity to it. Attempts to do so only makes the system more exploitable by bad actors, like blackmailers who use fake copyright claims to extract ransoms from working creators.

https://torrentfreak.com/youtube-strikes-now-being-used-as-scammers-extortion-tool/

But it would be a mistake to think that filterfraud was primarily a problem of shadowy scammers. The most prolific filter scammers and wage-thieves are giant music companies, like Sony Music, who claim nearly all classical music:

https://pluralistic.net/2020/05/22/crisis-for-thee-not-me/#filternet

The Big Tech companies argue that they have an appeals process that can reverse these overclaims, but that process is a joke. Instagram takedowns take a few seconds to file, but 28 months to appeal.

https://pluralistic.net/2020/05/17/cheap-truthers/#robot-sez-no

The entertainment industry are flagrant filternet abusers. Take Warner Chappell, whose subsidiary demonetizes videos that include the numbers "36" and "50":

https://www.dexerto.com/entertainment/annemunition-bizarre-copyright-strike-youtube-random-numbers-1317750/

Warner Chappell are prolific copyfraudsters. For decades, they fraudulently claimed ownership over "Happy Birthday" (!):

https://consumerist.com/2016/02/09/happy-birthday-song-settlement-to-pay-out-14-million-to-people-who-paid-to-use-song/

They're still at it - In 2020 they used a fraudulent claim to nuke a music theory video, and then a human being working on behalf of the company renewed the claim after being informed that they were mistaken about which song was quoted in the video:

https://pluralistic.net/2020/03/05/warner-chappell-copyfraud/#warnerchappell

The fact that automated copyright claims can remove material from the internet leads to a lot of sheer fuckery. In 2019, anti-fascists toyed with blaring copyrighted music at far right rallies to prevent their enemies from posting them online.

https://memex.craphound.com/2019/07/23/clever-hack-that-will-end-badly-playing-copyrighted-music-during-nazis-rallies-so-they-cant-be-posted-to-youtube/

At the time, I warned that this would end badly. Just a month before, there had been a huge scandal because critics of extremist violence found that automated filters killed their videos because they featured clips of that violence:

https://memex.craphound.com/2019/06/06/people-who-document-evidence-of-violent-extremism-are-being-shut-down-in-youtubes-crackdown-on-violent-extremism/

Since then, it's only gotten worse. The Chinese Communist Party uses copyfraud to remove critical videos from Youtube:

https://pluralistic.net/2020/05/27/literal-gunhumping/#communist-bandit and so does the Beverley Hills Police Department:

https://pluralistic.net/2021/02/10/duke-sucks/#bhpd

But despite all that, the momentum is for more filtering, to remove far fuzzier categories of content. The EU's Terror Regulation has just gone into effect, giving platforms just one hour to remove "terrorist" content:

https://www.eff.org/deeplinks/2021/04/eu-online-terrorism-regulation-bad-deal

The platforms have pivoted from opposing filter rules to endorsing them. Marc Zuckerberg says that he's fine with removing legal protections for online platforms unless they have hundreds of millions of dollars to install filters.

https://pluralistic.net/2021/03/25/facebook-has-a-facebook-problem/#played-for-zuckers

The advocates for a filternet insist that all these problems can be solved if geeks just nerd harder to automate good judgment, fair appeals, and accurate attributions. This is pure wishful thinking. As is so often the case in tech policy, "wanting it badly is not enough."

In 2019, the EU passed the Copyright Directive, whose Article1 7 is a "notice and staydown" rule requiring platforms to do instant takedowns on notice of infringement and to prevent content from being re-posted.

There's no way to do this without filters, but there's no way to make filters without violating the GDPR. The EU trying to figure out how to make it work, and the people who said this wouldn't require filters are now claiming that filters are fine.

https://pluralistic.net/2020/09/11/protocols-of-qanon/#no-filternet

Automating subtle judgment calls is impossible, not just because copyright's limitations - fair use and others - are grounded in subjective factors like "artistic intent," but because automating a flawed process creates flaws at scale.

Remember when Jimmy Fallon broadcasted himself playing a video game? NBC automatically claimed the whole program as its copyrighted work, and thereafter, gamers who streamed themselves playing that game got automated takedowns from NBC.

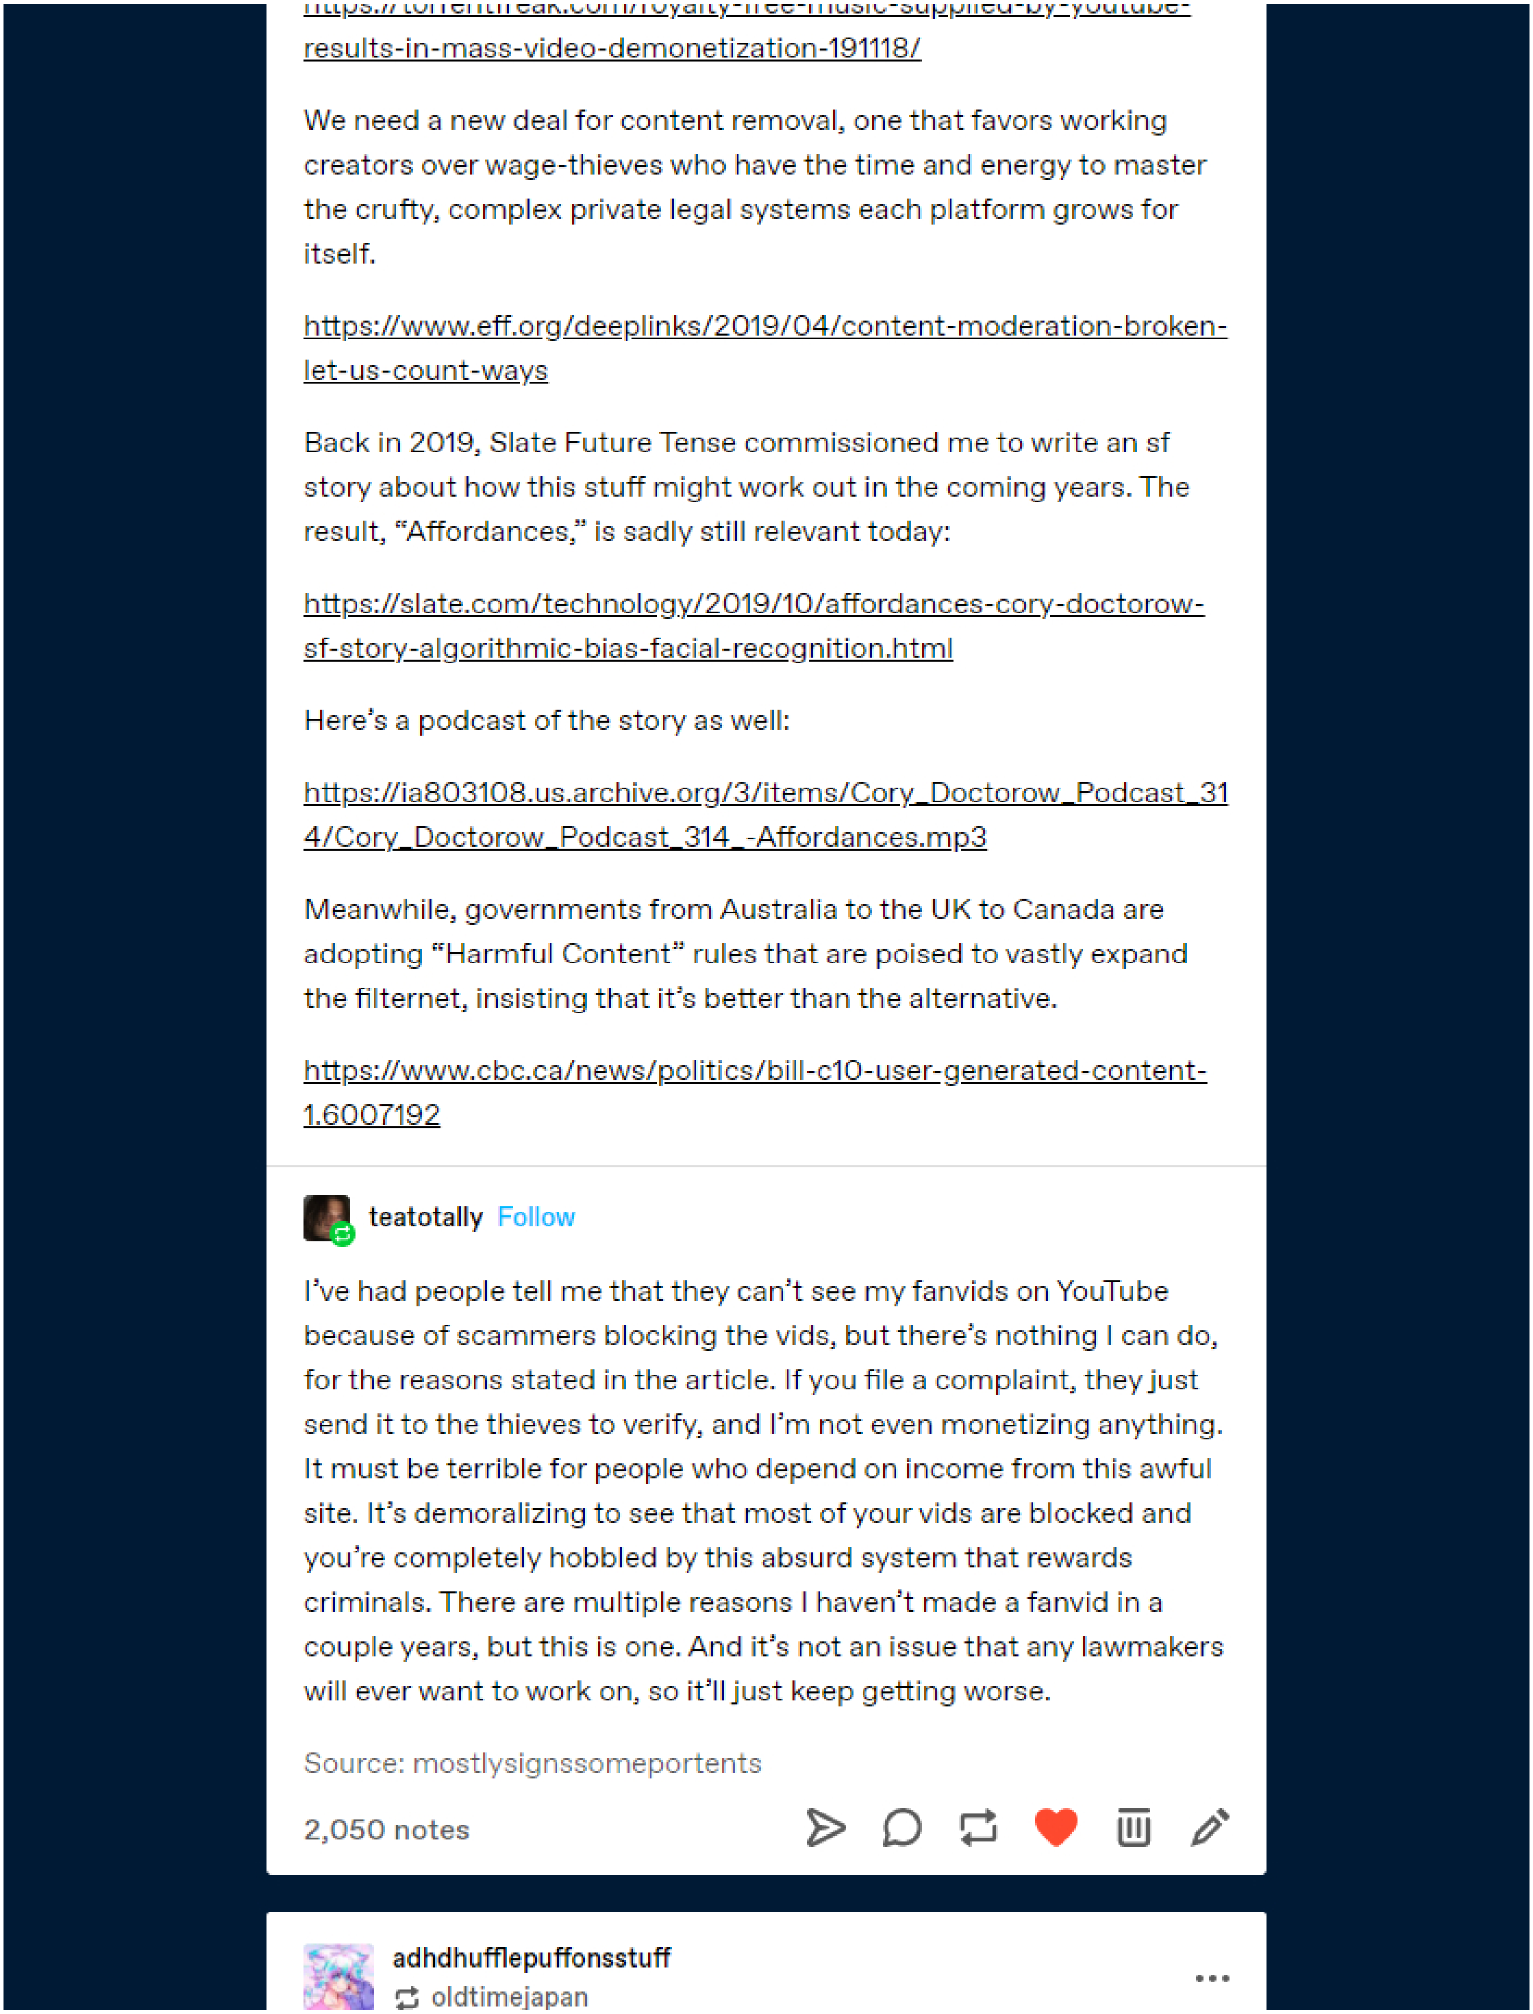
https://old.reddit.com/r/beatsaber/comments/bi9cp5/beat_saber_stream_blocked_by_jimmy_fallon_show/

The relentless expansion of proprietary rights over our virtual and physical world raises the stakes for filter errors. The new Notre Dame spire will be a copyrighted work - will filters block videos of protests in front of the cathedral?

https://www.techdirt.com/articles/20190425/09282042084/why-your-holiday-photos-videos-restored-notre-dame-cathedral-could-be-blocked-eus-upload-filters.shtml

And ever since the US's 1976 Copyright Act abolished a registration requirement, it's gotten harder to figure out who controls the rights to any work, so that even the "royalty free" music for Youtubers to safely use turned out to be copyrighted:

https://torrentfreak.com/royalty-free-music-supplied-by-youtube



https://torrentfreak.com/royalty-free-music-supplied-by-youtube-results-in-mass-video-demonetization-191118/

We need a new deal for content removal, one that favors working creators over wage-thieves who have the time and energy to master the crufty, complex private legal systems each platform grows for itself.

https://www.eff.org/deeplinks/2019/04/content-moderation-broken-let-us-count-ways

Back in 2019, Slate Future Tense commissioned me to write an sf story about how this stuff might work out in the coming years. The result, "Affordances," is sadly still relevant today:

https://slate.com/technology/2019/10/affordances-cory-doctorow-sf-story-algorithmic-bias-facial-recognition.html

Here's a podcast of the story as well:

https://ia803108.us.archive.org/3/items/Cory_Doctorow_Podcast_314/Cory_Doctorow_Podcast_314_-Affordances.mp3

Meanwhile, governments from Australia to the UK to Canada are adopting "Harmful Content" rules that are poised to vastly expand the filternet, insisting that it's better than the alternative.

I've had people tell me that they can't see my fanvids on YouTube because of scammers blocking the vids, but there's nothing I can do, for the reasons stated in the article. If you file a complaint, they just send it to the thieves to verify, and I'm not even monetizing anything. It must be terrible for people who depend on income from this awful site. It's demoralizing to see that most of your vids are blocked and you're completely hobbled by this absurd system that rewards criminals. There are multiple reasons I haven't made a fanvid in a couple years, but this is one. And it's not an issue that any lawmakers will ever want to work on, so it'll just keep getting worse.

actually you either need to set clear boundaries with people or not get mad when people "overstep" something that doesnt even exist to them. its stupid as hell to assume everyone owns the standardized handbook of social interaction and get mad when someone may do something you dont like without even realizing it. its even worse when people act like its a toxic relationship when the literal only problem is no established boundaries lmfao

Merlin and Lancelot taking a little walk through the lower town. They're checking out some stalls that have just moved in. Lancelot buys Merlin a bit of fruit, and Merlin makes Lancelot have a bite. Lancelot's lips brush Merlin's fingers, and they're in public, so they just kiss a little, and it's soft and very chaste.

Merlin taste the strawberries (idk what fruit they have in medieval times) off Lancelot's lips and makes a silly remark about how much he likes it.

It becomes a common treat when they're in season for Lancelot to buy Merlin strawberries, fresh picked that morning, and serve them with cakes or just fresh cream. They feed them to each other, and it always makes Merlin's chest a little tight because he loves Lancelot so much.

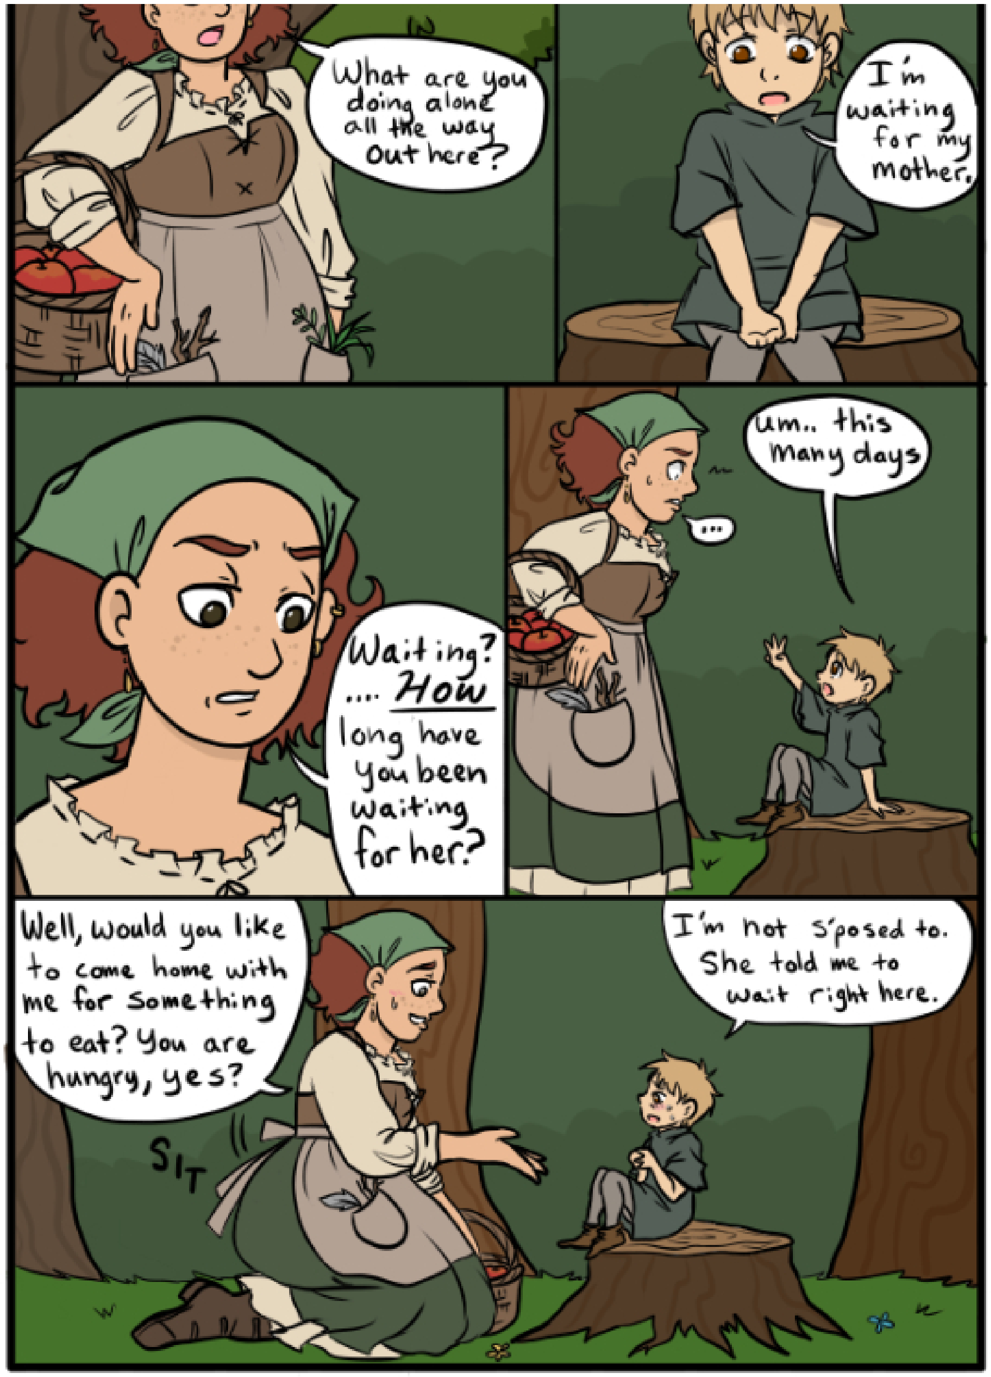
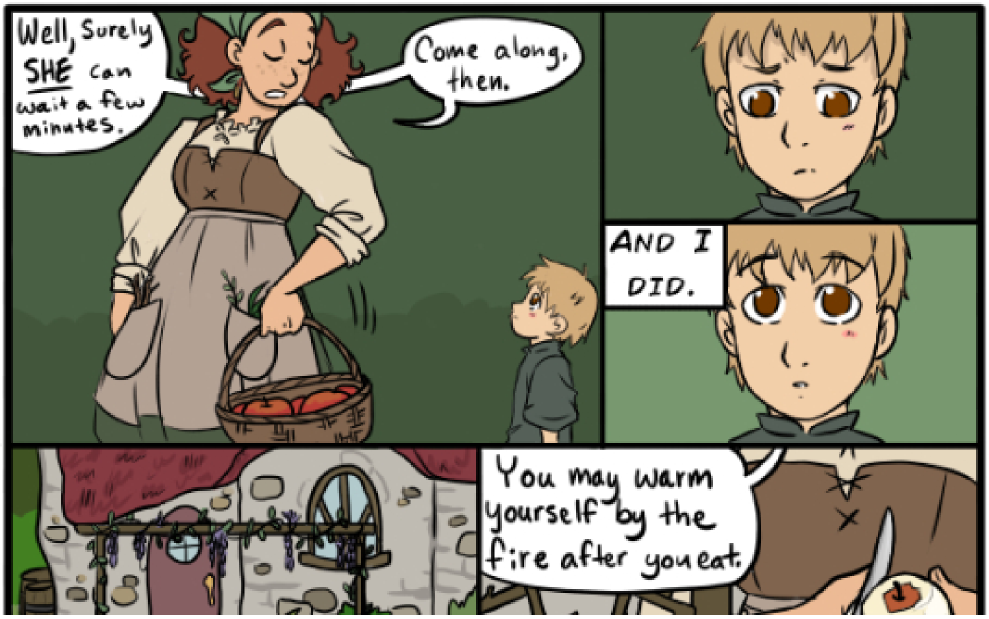
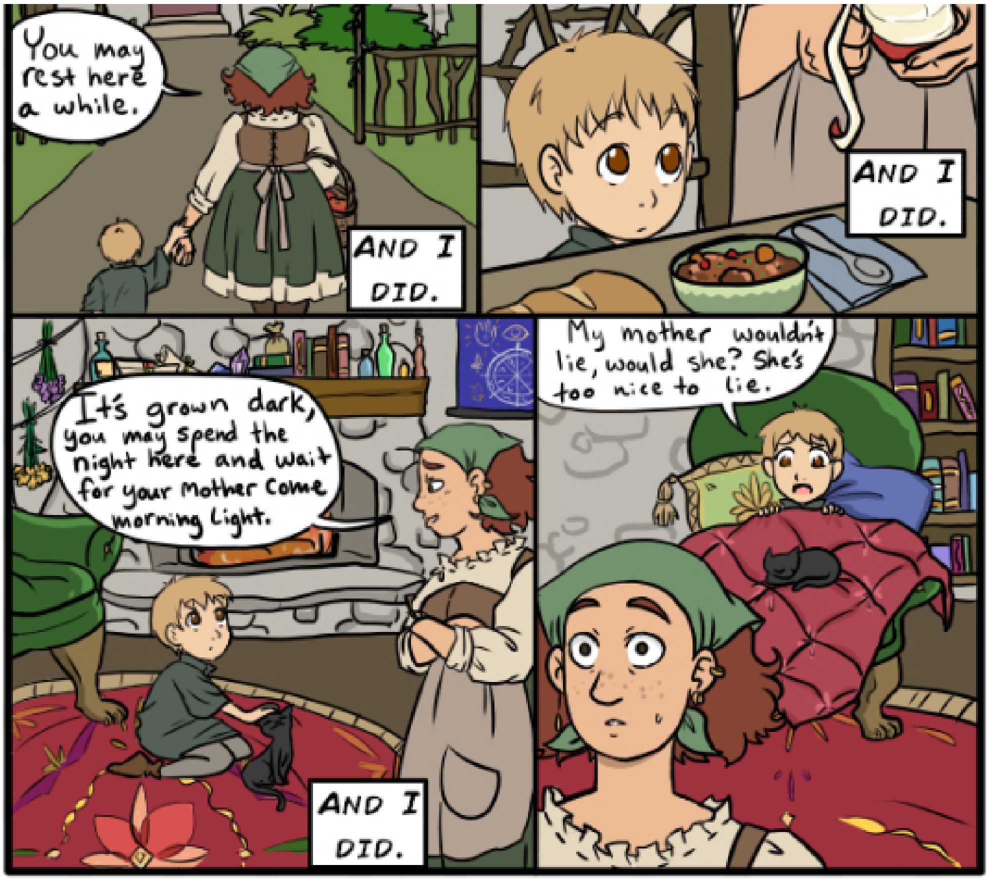
I REMEMBER WE WALKED FOR HOURS.
WE WALKED.
AND WALKED.
'TIL MOTHER STOPPED US AT A SMALL CLEARING.
"I WILL BE RIGHT BACK." SHE SAID TO ME.
"WAIT HERE. AND DO NOT LEAVE."
AND I DID.
FOR THREE DAYS.
AND THREE NIGHTS.
AND FINALLY. MY MOTHER FOUND ME.
you there.
I'm...



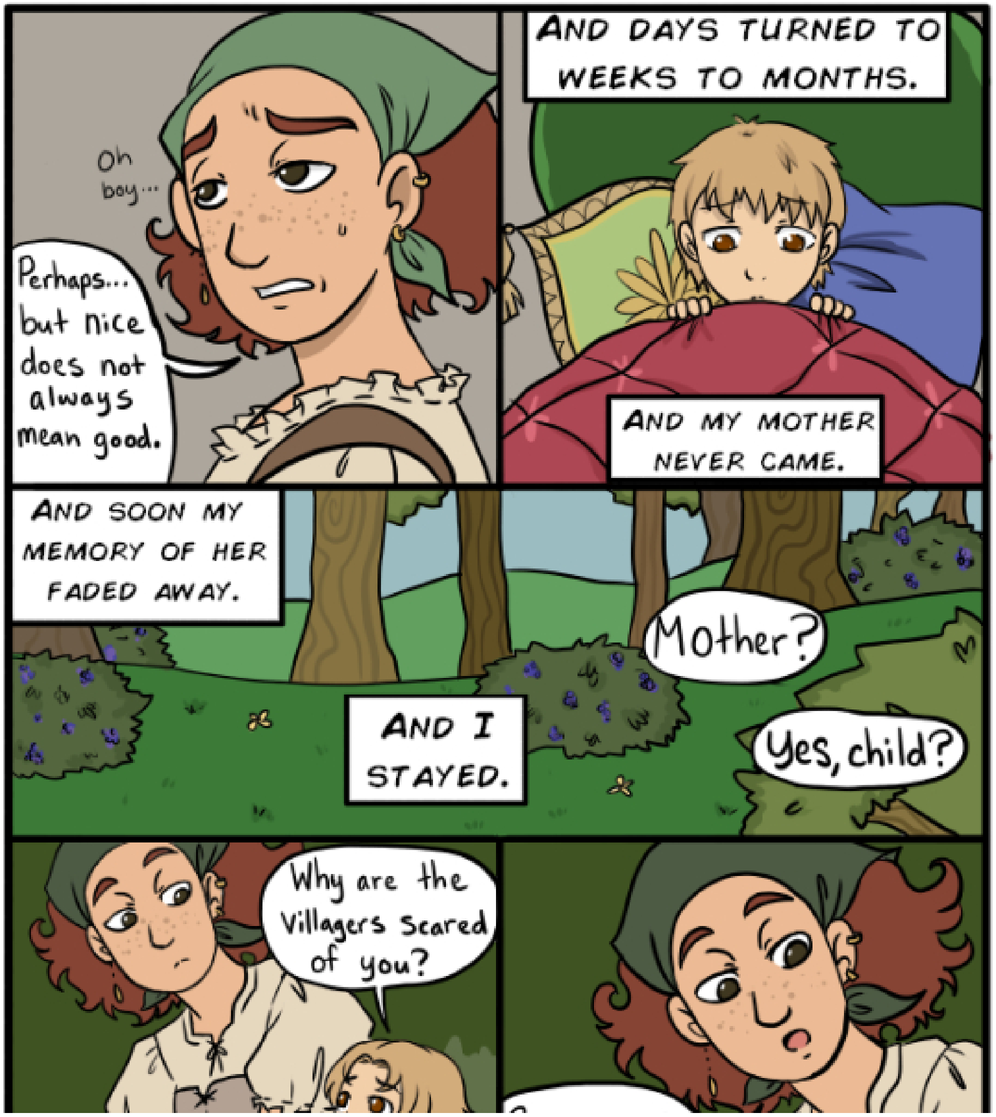
What are you doing alone all the way out here?
I'm waiting for my mother.
Waiting? .... How long have you been waiting for her?
um.. this many days
...
Well, would you like to come home with me for something to eat? You are hungry, yes?
I'm not s'posed to. She told me to wait right here.
SIT



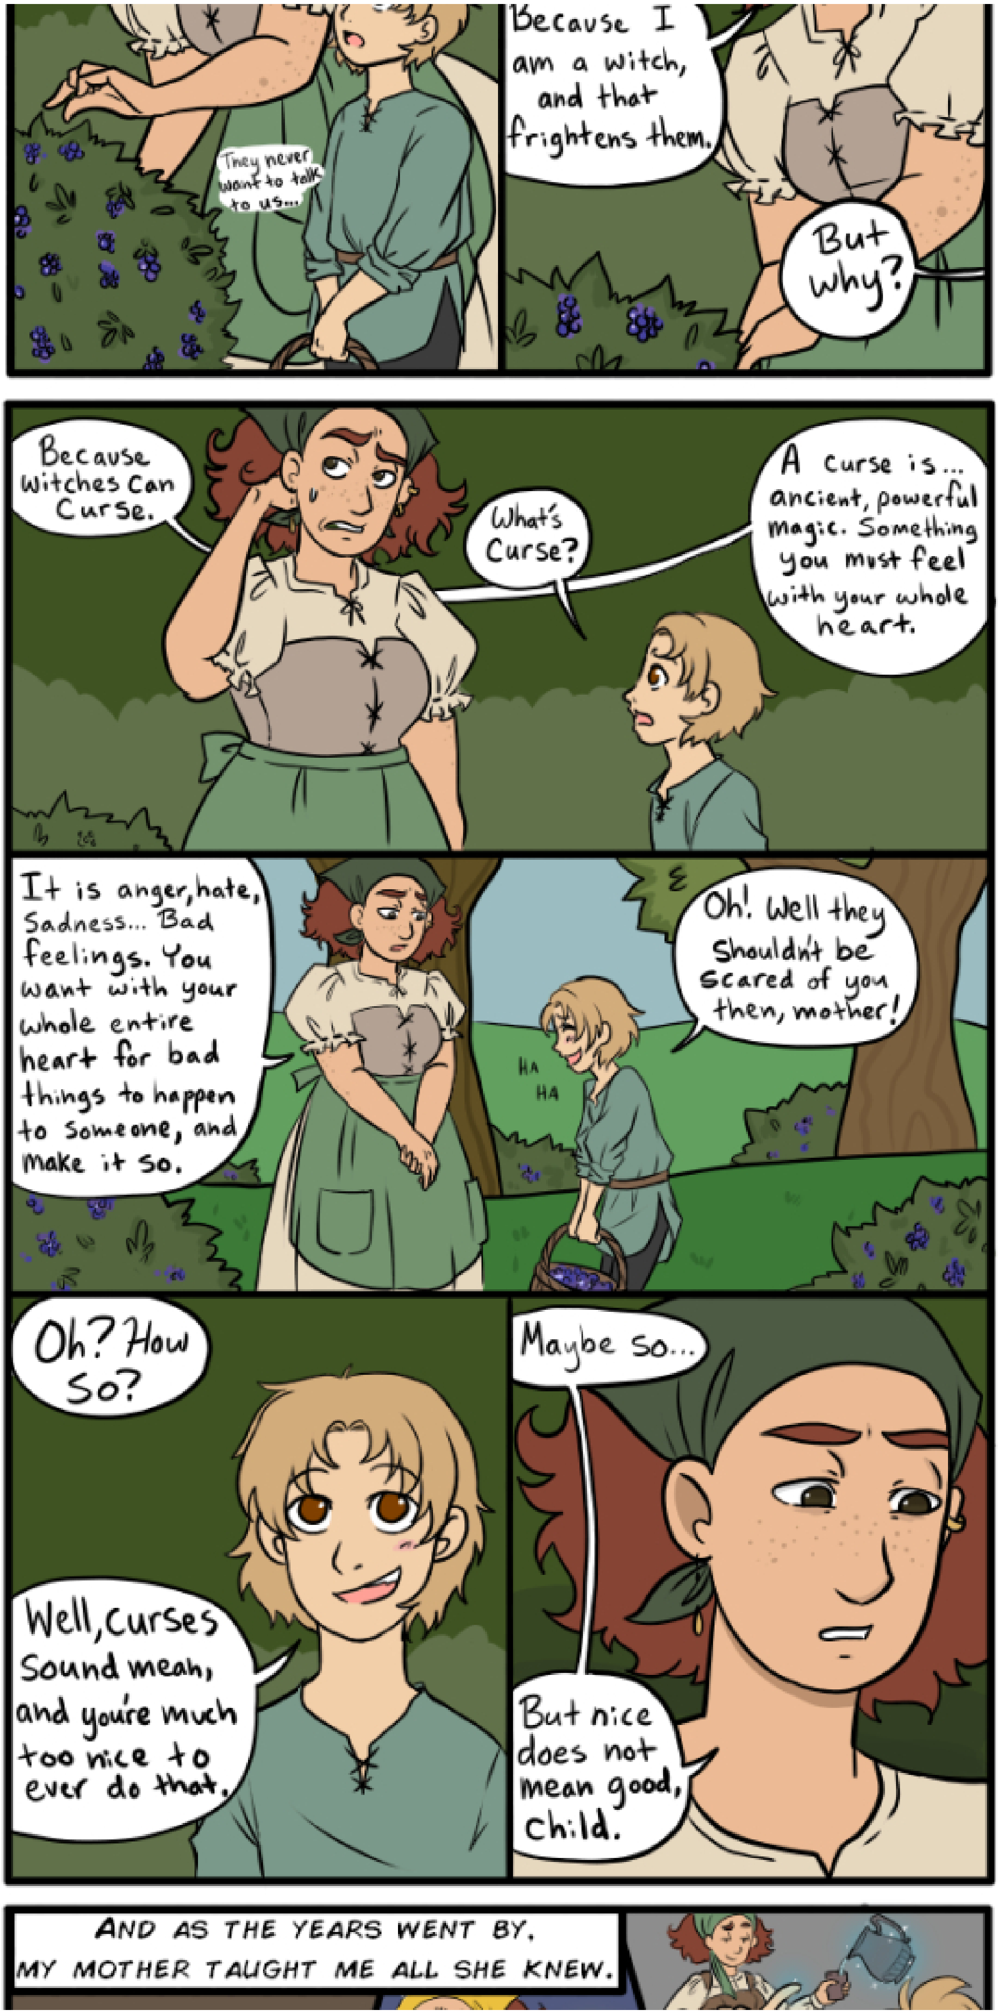
Well, Surely SHE can wait a few minutes.
Come along, then.
AND I DID.
You may warm yourself by the fire after you eat.



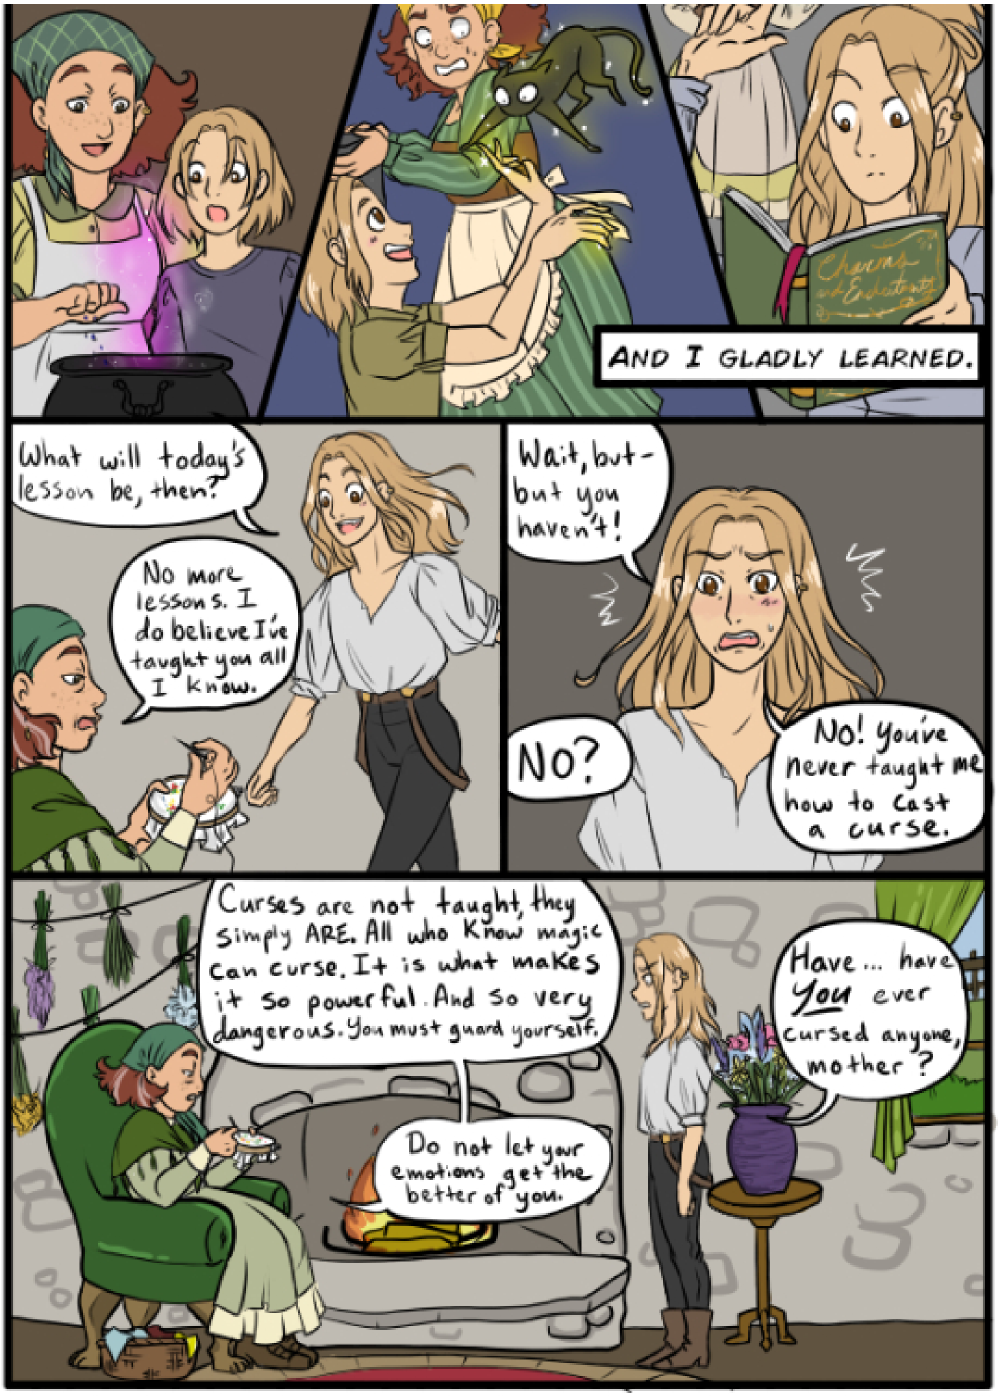
You may rest here a while.
AND I DID.
AND I DID.
It's grown dark, you may spend the night here and wait for your Mother come morning Light.
AND I DID.
My mother wouldn't lie, would she? She's too nice to lie.



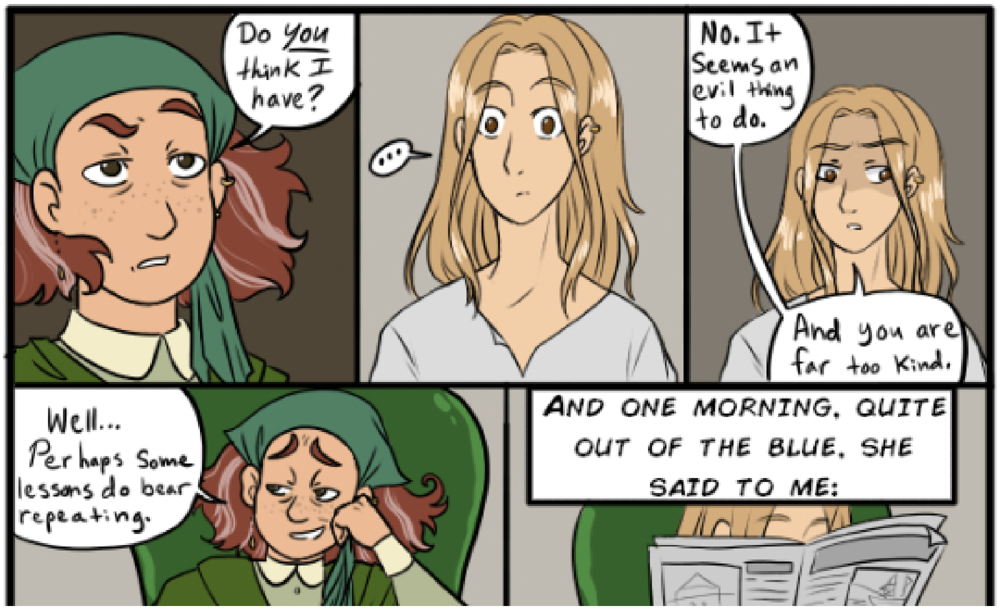
Oh boy...
Perhaps... but nice does not always mean good.
AND DAYS TURNED TO WEEKS TO MONTHS.
AND MY MOTHER NEVER CAME.
AND SOON MY MEMORY OF HER FADED AWAY.
Mother?
AND I STAYED.
Yes, child?
Why are the Villagers Scared of you?



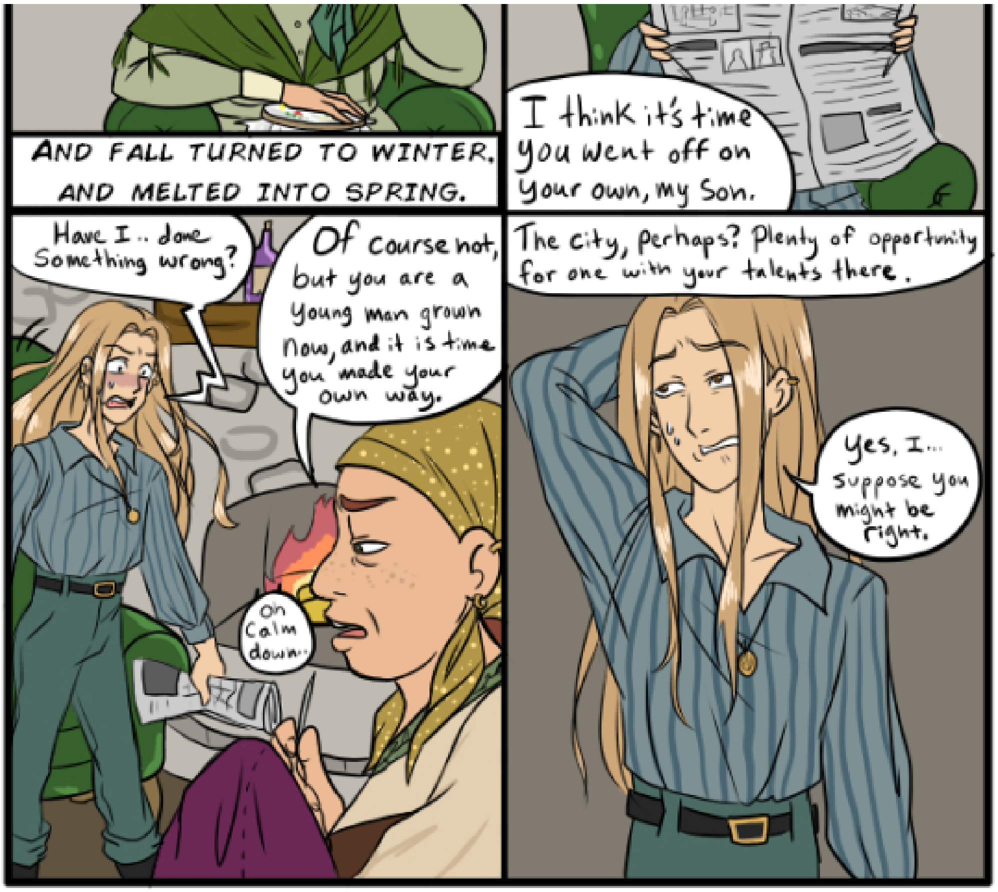
They never want to talk to us...
Because I am a witch, and that frightens them.
But why?
Because witches can curse.
What's curse?
A curse is... ancient, powerful magic. Something you must feel with your whole heart.
It is anger, hate, sadness... Bad feelings. You want with your whole entire heart for bad things to happen to someone, and make it so.
HA HA
Oh! Well they shouldn't be scared of you then, mother!
Oh? How so?
Well, curses sound mean, and you're much too nice to ever do that.
Maybe so...
But nice does not mean good, child.
AND AS THE YEARS WENT BY, MY MOTHER TAUGHT ME ALL SHE KNEW.



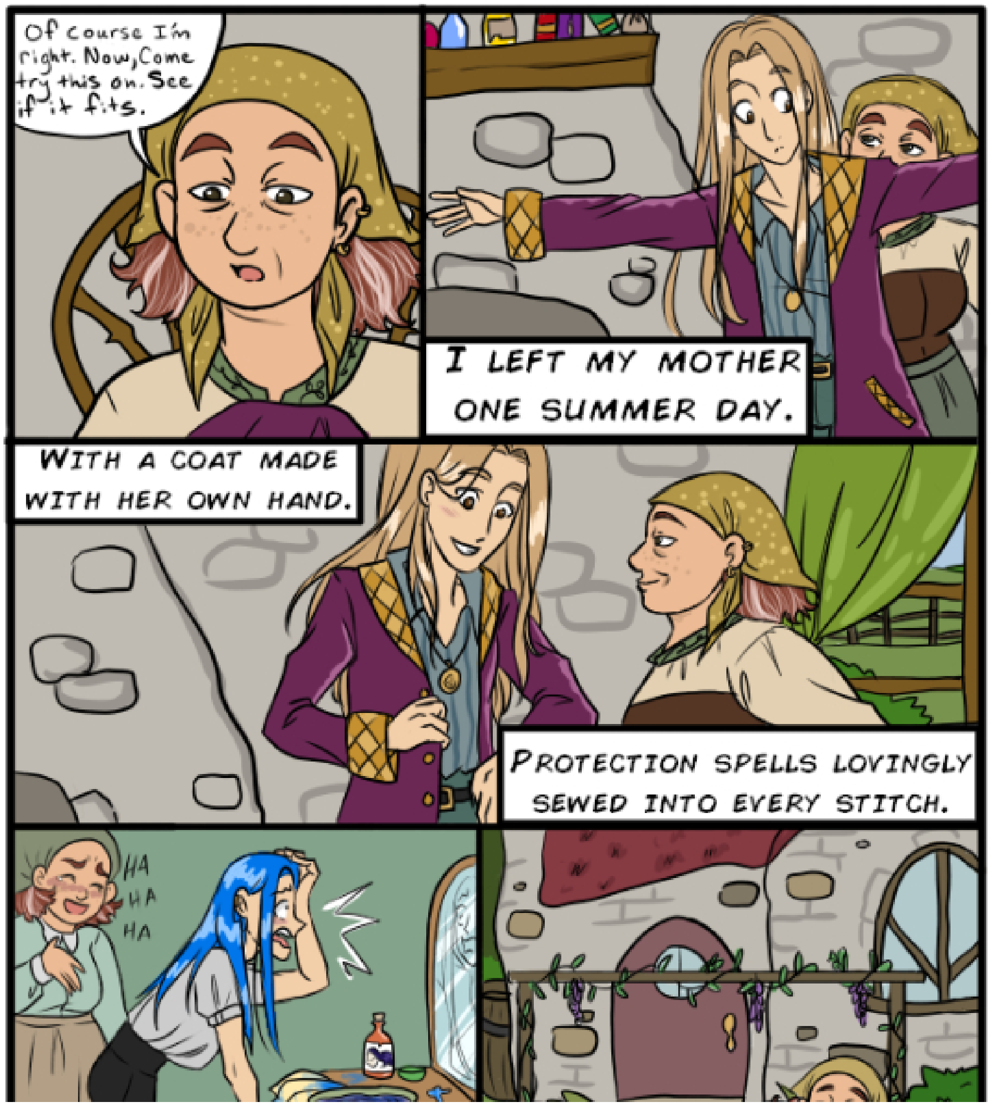
Charms and Enchantments
AND I GLADLY LEARNED.
What will today's lesson be, then?
No more lessons. I do believe I've taught you all I know.
Wait, but- but you haven't!
No?
No! You've never taught me how to cast a curse.
Curses are not taught, they simply ARE. All who know magic can curse. It is what makes it so powerful. And so very dangerous. You must guard yourself.
Do not let your emotions get the better of you.
Have... have you ever cursed anyone, mother?



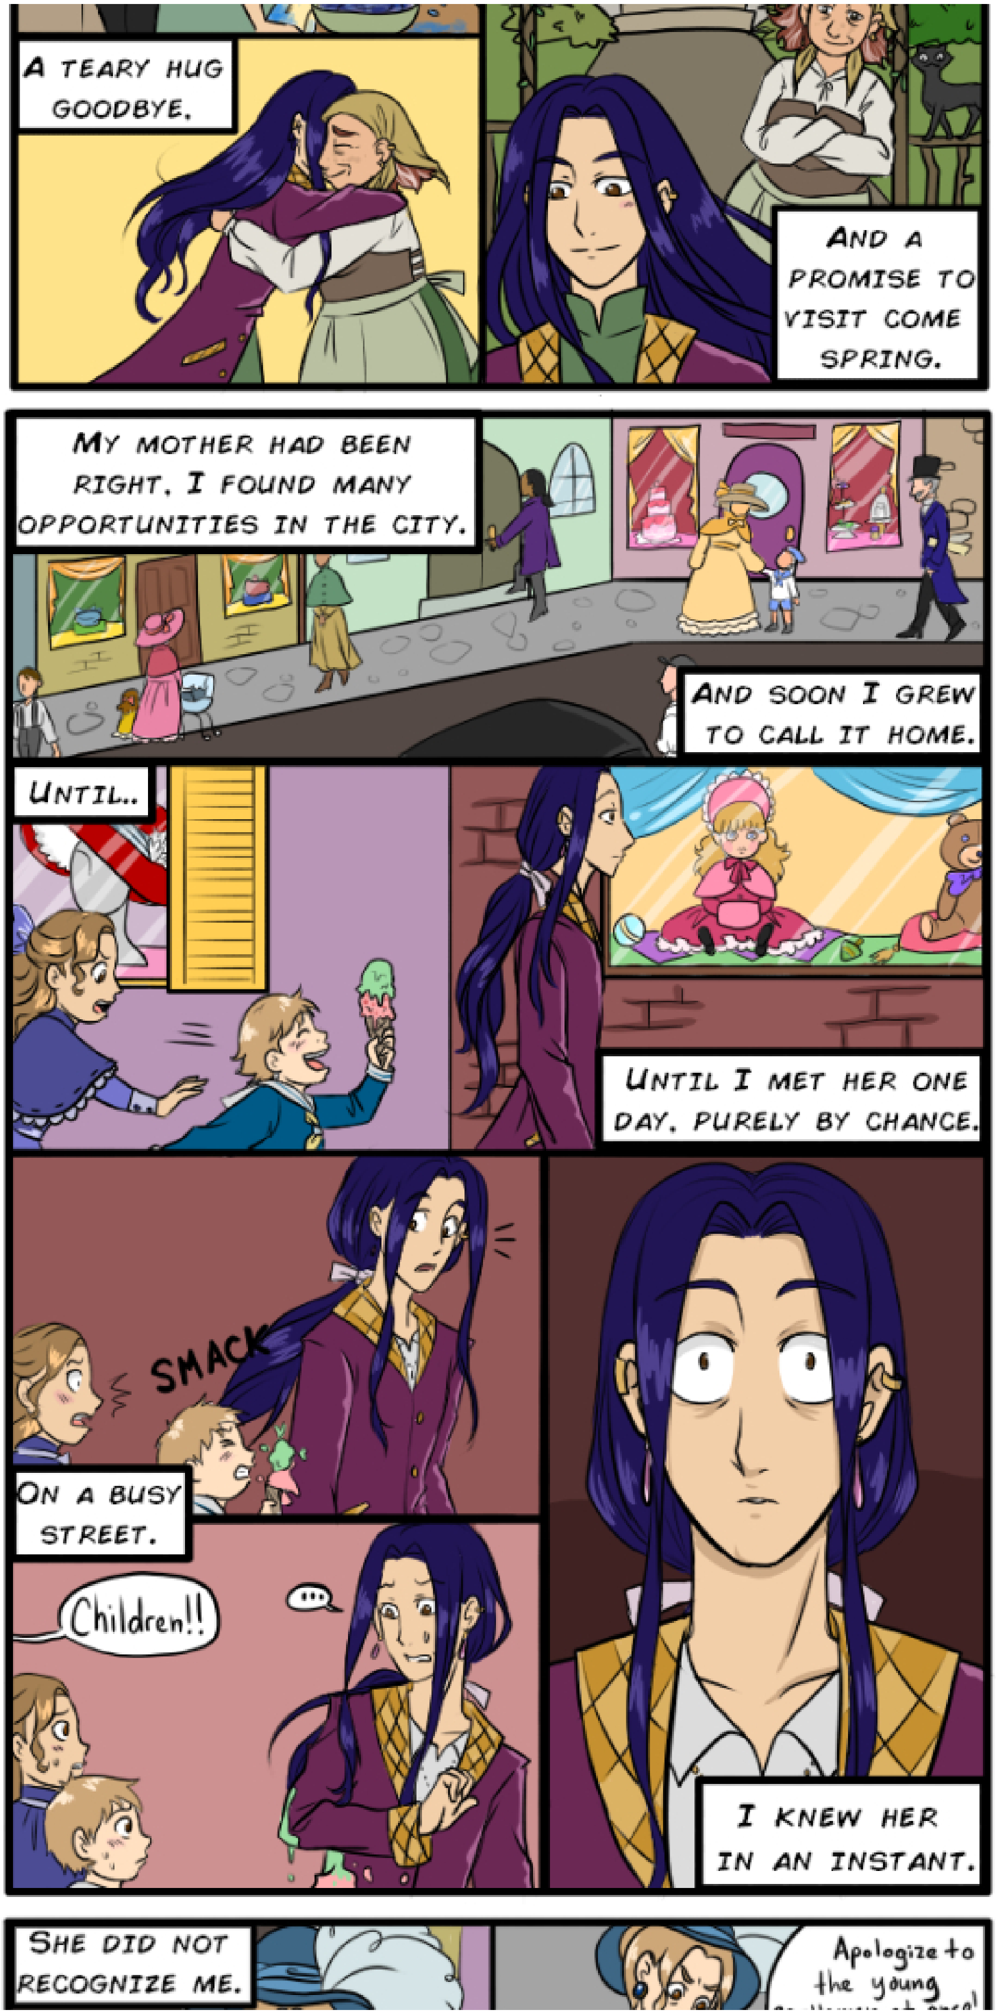
Do you think I have?
...
No. It seems an evil thing to do.
And you are far too kind.
Well... Perhaps some lessons do bear repeating.
AND ONE MORNING, QUITE OUT OF THE BLUE, SHE SAID TO ME:



AND FALL TURNED TO WINTER. AND MELTED INTO SPRING.
I think it's time you went off on your own, my Son.
Have I.. done Something wrong?
Of course not, but you are a young man grown now, and it is time you made your own way.
Oh calm down..
The city, perhaps? Plenty of opportunity for one with your talents there.
Yes, I... suppose you might be right.



Of course I'm right. Now, Come try this on. See if it fits.
I LEFT MY MOTHER ONE SUMMER DAY.
WITH A COAT MADE WITH HER OWN HAND.
PROTECTION SPELLS LOVINGLY SEWED INTO EVERY STITCH.
HA HA HA



A TEARY HUG GOODBYE.
AND A PROMISE TO VISIT COME SPRING.
MY MOTHER HAD BEEN RIGHT. I FOUND MANY OPPORTUNITIES IN THE CITY.
AND SOON I GREW TO CALL IT HOME.
UNTIL..
UNTIL I MET HER ONE DAY, PURELY BY CHANCE.
SMACK
ON A BUSY STREET.
Children!!
...
I KNEW HER IN AN INSTANT.
SHE DID NOT RECOGNIZE ME.
Apologize to the young Children! What did I say about ru- Oh, your poor coat!

gentlemen at once.
we're sorry.
..Sorry Sir
And what a lovely coat it is!
...my mother made it for me.
My! What a good Mother you must have!
SHE WAS VERY POLITE.
I insist you send me the cleaning bill, Sir!
It is the least I can do.
SHE WAS VERY KIND.
Good day to you, sir!
SHE WAS VERY..NICE.
Come along, children.
CRUSH
yes, mother.
BUT NICE DOES NOT MEAN GOOD.

So aren't Israelis and Palestinians just fighting over religion?

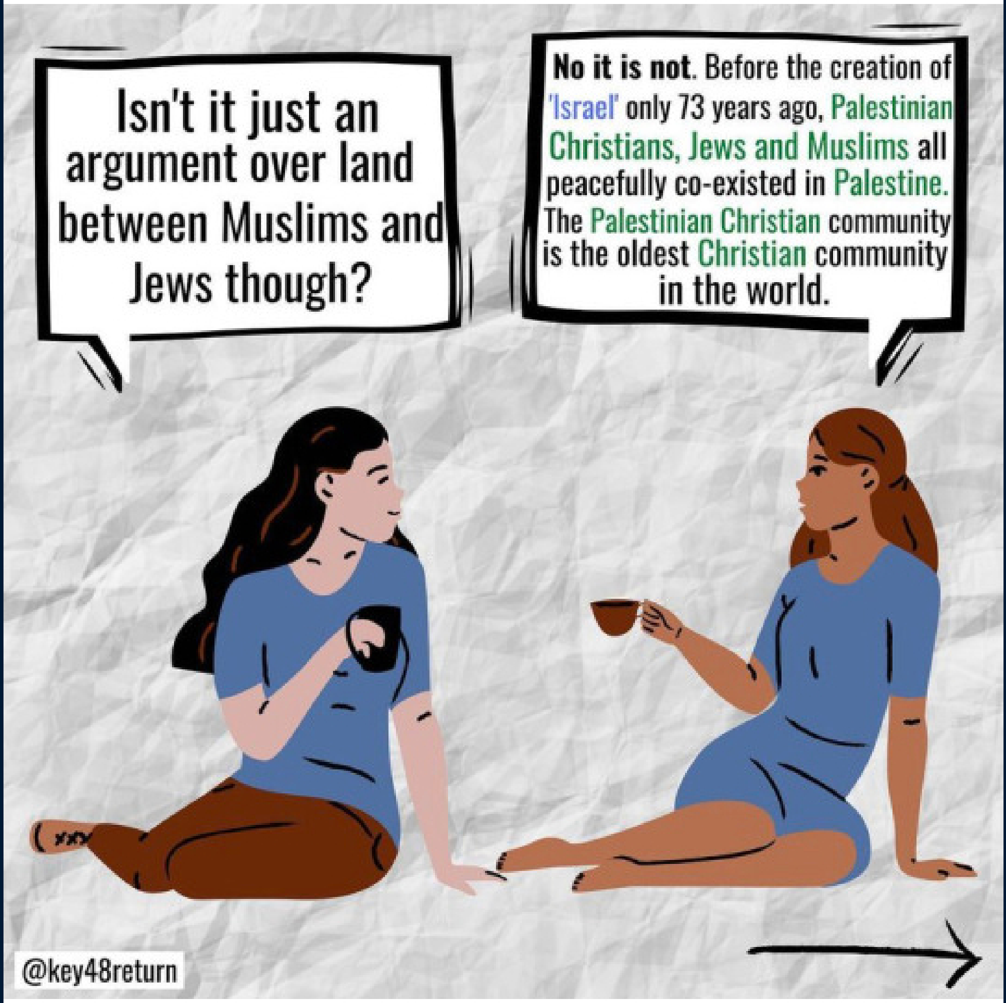
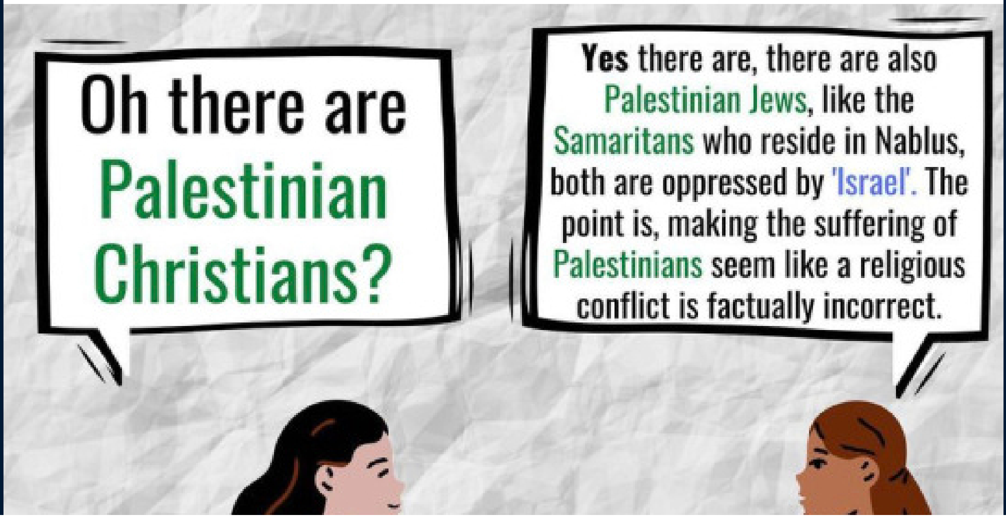
They are not 'fighting', Israelis are the oppressors and Palestinians are the oppressed and the situation is about anything but religion.

@key48return

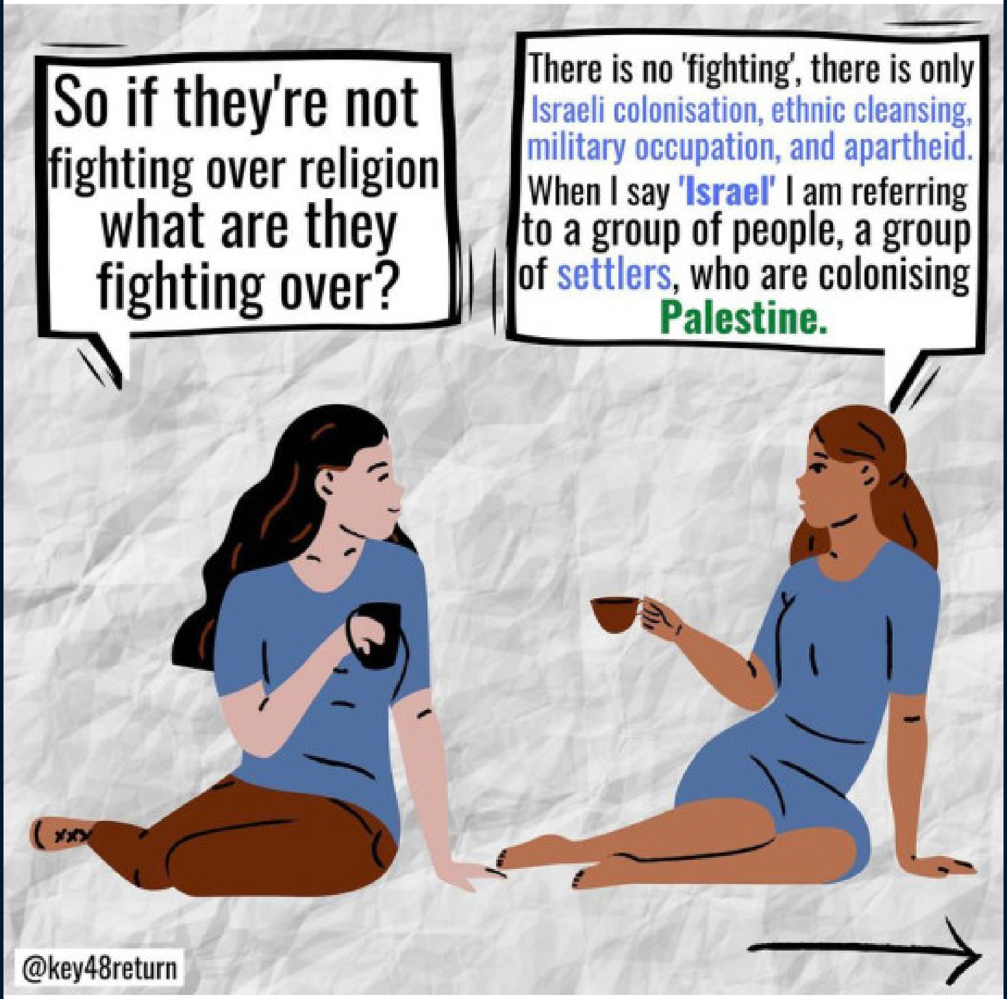


Isn't it just an argument over land between Muslims and Jews though?
No it is not. Before the creation of 'Israel' only 73 years ago, Palestinian Christians, Jews and Muslims all peacefully co-existed in Palestine. The Palestinian Christian community is the oldest Christian community in the world.
@key48return

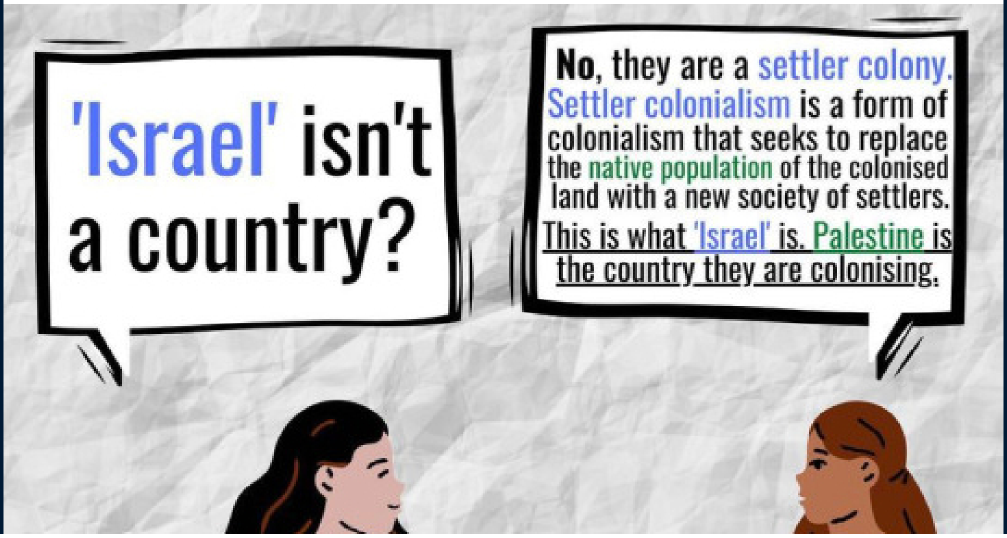


Oh there are Palestinian Christians?
Yes there are, there are also Palestinian Jews, like the Samaritans who reside in Nablus, both are oppressed by 'Israel'. The point is, making the suffering of Palestinians seem like a religious conflict is factually incorrect.

@key48return

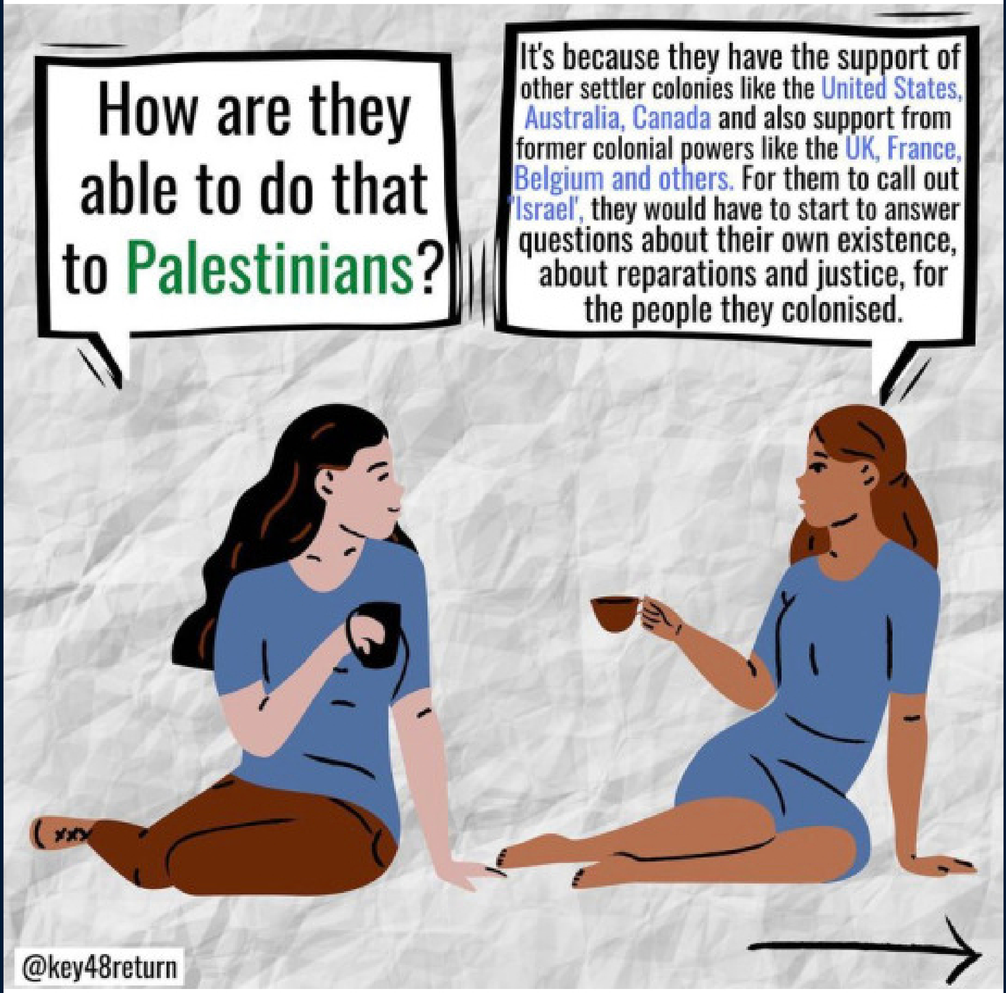


So if they're not fighting over religion what are they fighting over?
There is no 'fighting', there is only Israeli colonisation, ethnic cleansing, military occupation, and apartheid. When I say 'Israel' I am referring to a group of people, a group of settlers, who are colonising Palestine.
@key48return

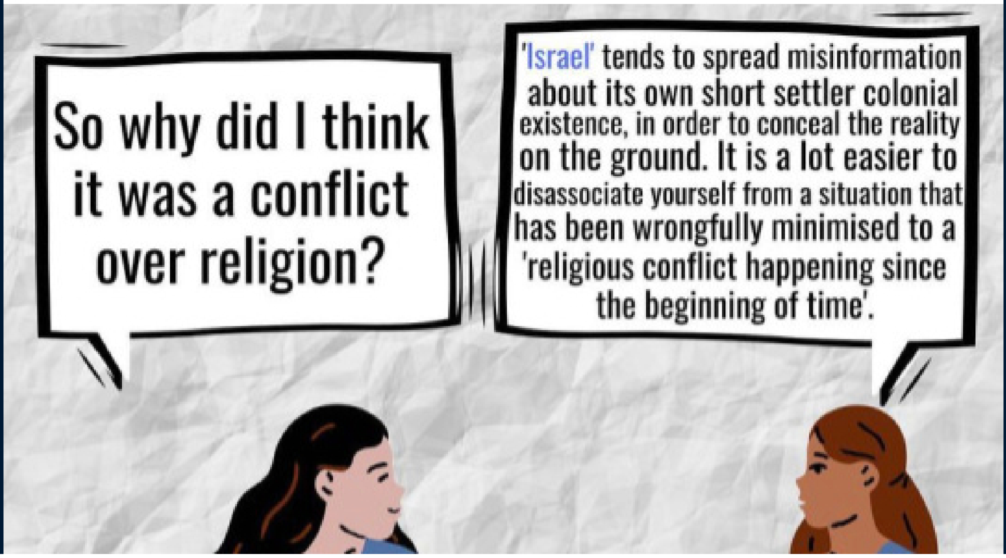


'Israel' isn't a country?
No, they are a settler colony. Settler colonialism is a form of colonialism that seeks to replace the native population of the colonised land with a new society of settlers. This is what 'Israel' is. Palestine is the country they are colonising.

@key48return

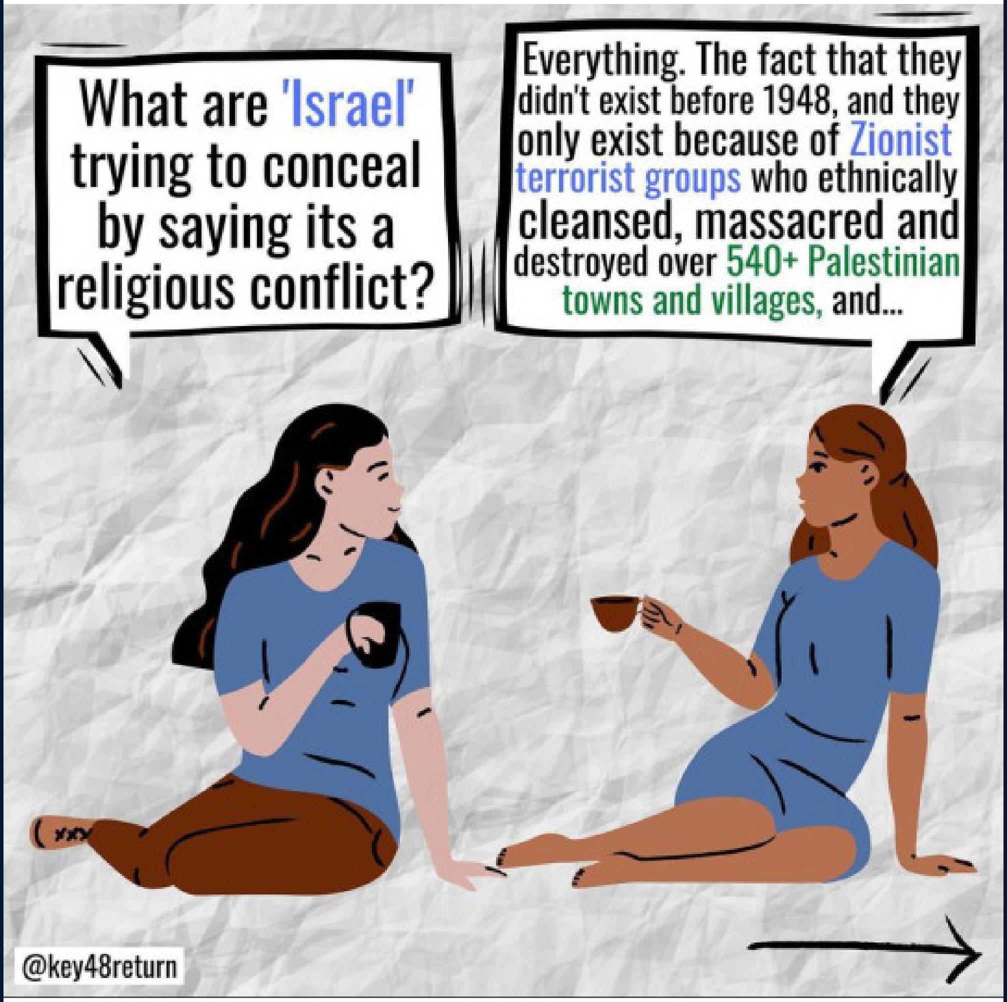


How are they able to do that to Palestinians?
It's because they have the support of other settler colonies like the United States, Australia, Canada and also support from former colonial powers like the UK, France, Belgium and others. For them to call out 'Israel', they would have to start to answer questions about their own existence, about reparations and justice, for the people they colonised.
@key48return

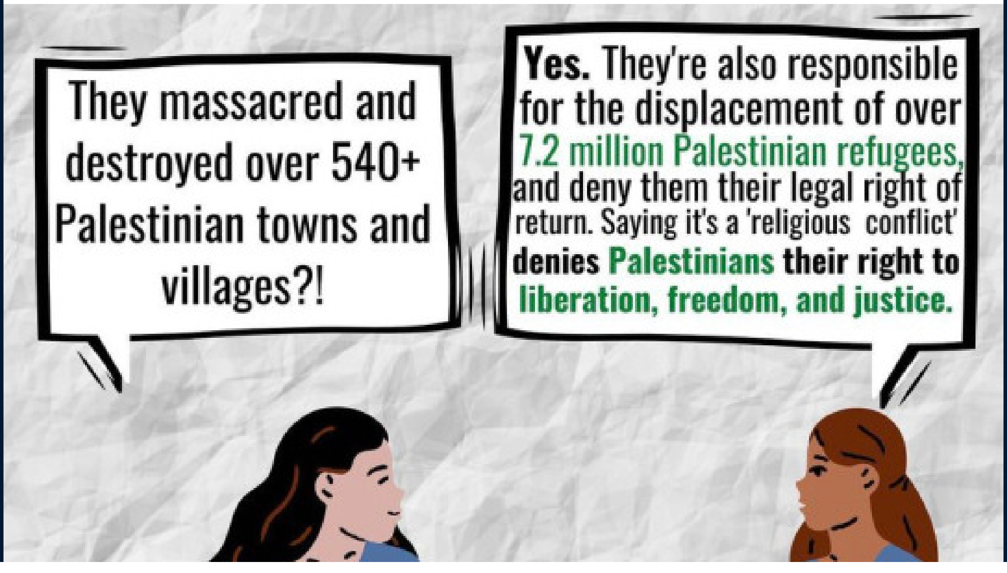


So why did I think it was a conflict over religion?
'Israel' tends to spread misinformation about its own short settler colonial existence, in order to conceal the reality on the ground. It is a lot easier to disassociate yourself from a situation that has been wrongfully minimised to a 'religious conflict happening since the beginning of time'.

@key48return

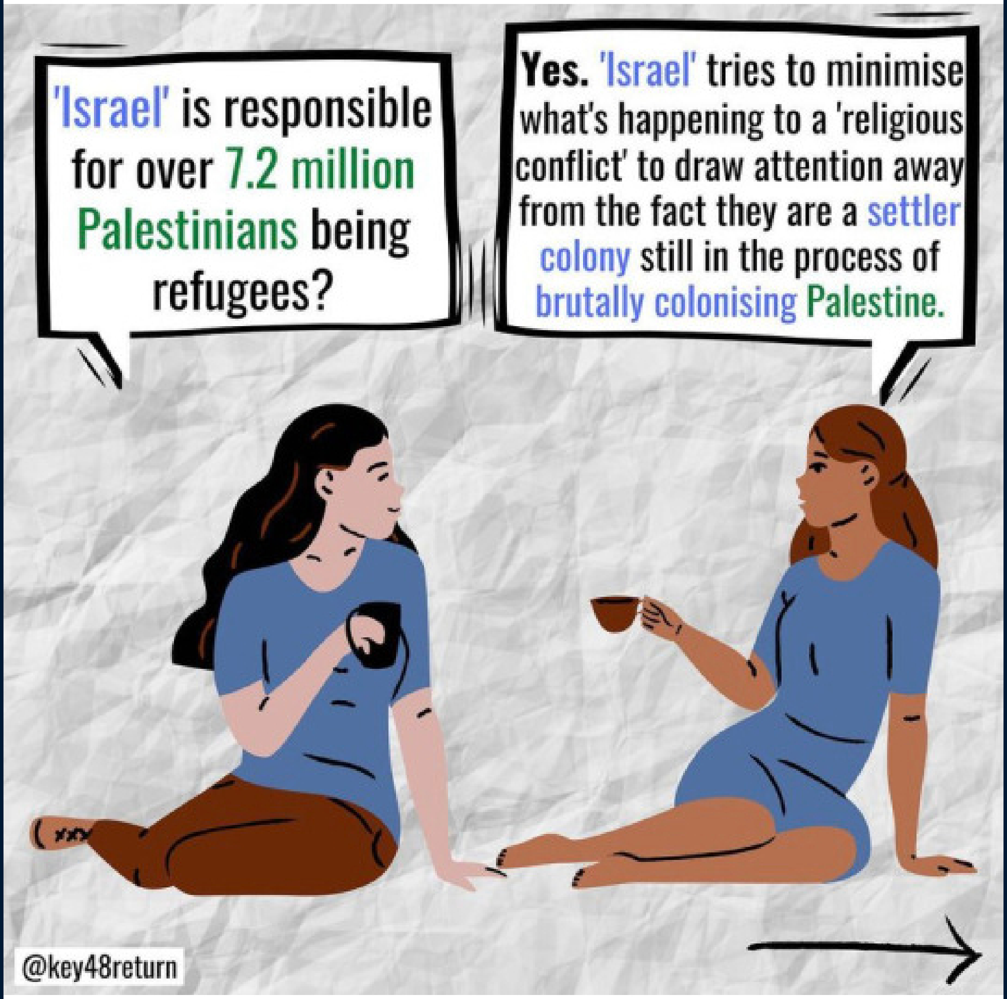


What are 'Israel' trying to conceal by saying its a religious conflict?
Everything. The fact that they didn't exist before 1948, and they only exist because of Zionist terrorist groups who ethnically cleansed, massacred and destroyed over 540+ Palestinian towns and villages, and...
@key48return



They massacred and destroyed over 540+ Palestinian towns and villages?!
Yes. They're also responsible for the displacement of over 7.2 million Palestinian refugees, and deny them their legal right of return. Saying it's a 'religious conflict' denies Palestinians their right to liberation, freedom, and justice.

@key48return



'Israel' is responsible for over 7.2 million Palestinians being refugees?
Yes. 'Israel' tries to minimise what's happening to a 'religious conflict' to draw attention away from the fact they are a settler colony still in the process of brutally colonising Palestine.
@key48return

Please do your research! There is so much misinformation out there and a lot of lies.

Everyone should know the truth so please try to know as much as you can so you can spread awareness and help!

TOP DEFINITION

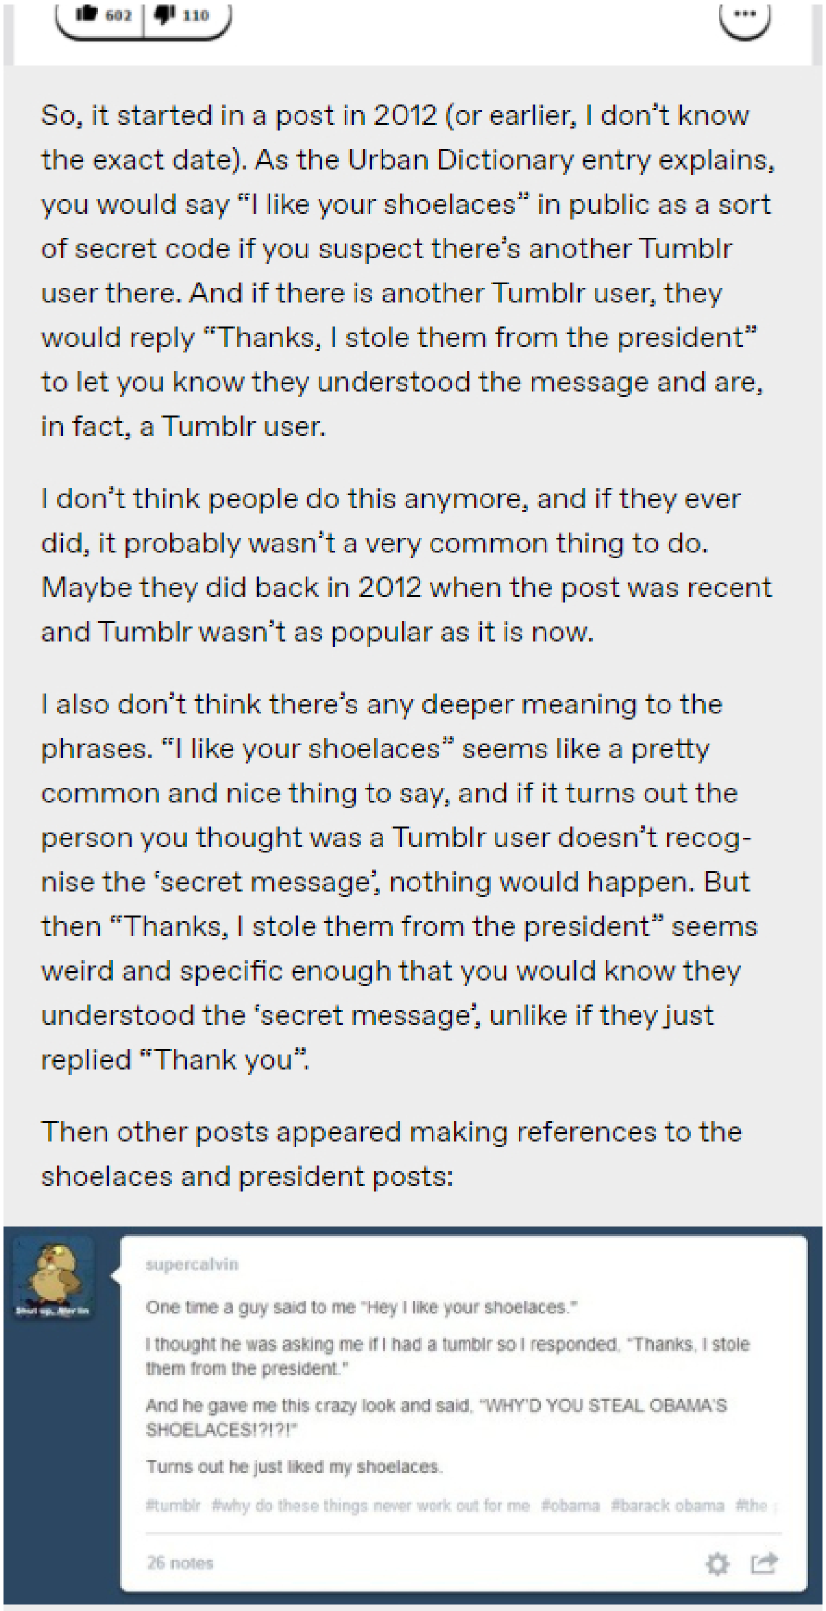
I like your shoelaces

A phrase used by Tumblr users to detect another Tumblr user in the real world. Appropriate response is "Thanks, I stole them from the president!"

(Tumblr user out in public)
"I like your shoelaces"
(The respondent that is also a Tumblr User)
"Thanks, I stole them from the president!"

#tumblr #a must know #real world #addicted #fangirls #fellow tumblee's

by Whovian-classicrock-fandom November 16, 2012



So, it started in a post in 2012 (or earlier, I don't know the exact date). As the Urban Dictionary entry explains, you would say "I like your shoelaces" in public as a sort of secret code if you suspect there's another Tumblr user there. And if there is another Tumblr user, they would reply "Thanks, I stole them from the president" to let you know they understood the message and are, in fact, a Tumblr user.

I don't think people do this anymore, and if they ever did, it probably wasn't a very common thing to do. Maybe they did back in 2012 when the post was recent and Tumblr wasn't as popular as it is now.

I also don't think there's any deeper meaning to the phrases. "I like your shoelaces" seems like a pretty common and nice thing to say, and if it turns out the person you thought was a Tumblr user doesn't recognise the 'secret message', nothing would happen. But then "Thanks, I stole them from the president" seems weird and specific enough that you would know they understood the 'secret message', unlike if they just replied "Thank you".

Then other posts appeared making references to the shoelaces and president posts:

supercalvin

One time a guy said to me "Hey I like your shoelaces."

I thought he was asking me if I had a tumblr so I responded, "Thanks, I stole them from the president."

And he gave me this crazy look and said, "WHY'D YOU STEAL OBAMA'S SHOELACES!?!?!"

Turns out he just liked my shoelaces.

Thor who needed a lot of help building his character and decided on a couple easy to remember traits (Strong, honor, doesn't get metaphors)

What is or isn't a slur can be highly contextual, y'all.

"Jonny Sims bummed a fag off my ma" doesn't contain a slur, but "What are you, some kind of fag?" does.

"Queer studies", "the queer community" and "I'm queer"? Not a slur. Some bigot calling you a "dirty queer"? Slur.

"Be gay, do crimes" and "He's gay" ≠ slur, but "Ew, that's so gay" = slur.

In conclusion, stop buying into this fucking "q slur" bullshit. Queer people talking about the queer community aren't using it as a slur any more than a gay man calling himself gay is using that term as a slur.

pansexual-pied-piper

Everyone tagging this as "Don't call people 'queer' if they aren't comfortable with it", I don't disagree with you, but I do have one question for you:

Why are you singling out "queer"?

Hi, I'm queer and I don't like being called gay. Why is it always "don't call people 'queer' if they don't like it" but never "don't call people 'gay' if they don't like it"? Or just "don't call people words they are uncomfortable with"?

Why is it only ever "queer" that gets singled out?

And why do you even feel the need to tag that onto this post? All I said was "stop tagging people referring to themselves this way as if it were the same as bigots hurling it as a slur".

i re-watched it several times, looking for what he does differently. finally i spotted it. look at the line of motion in his strike. it's not especially fast, he doesn't wind up more than the others, and it's not a matter of strength – the guy who knocked over the stand probably put more muscle into it. but there's a unity of movement he has that the others lack. his body and sword are all one curve. everything moves at once along the same line.

from a physics perspective, that means all the force he's applying is concentrated at the point of contact between his sword's edge and the target, and it moves at just the speed that breakage propogates through the material. too slow and it wouldn't have enough force; too fast and he'd get ahead of the break, shoving the target over instead of cutting it.

from a writing perspective, that means that i should focus on describing a master swordsman's smoothness more than their strength or speed, and can also have witnesses be confused at the effectiveness of strikes that don't actually seem all that fast.

I had a mod recommended to me called Constructable Crosses. It's a bunch of different kinds of Christian religious iconography so you can build a church in your settlements if you want to.

I asked if it wouldn't be too much trouble, maybe, since the author had another update planned, if maybe he could add a Magen David to hang outside a synagogue? And I would pay him?

I expected that I might be ignored or told no. At best, there would be one "okay" example of a Magen David and I'd use it because it was all that was available.

This dude went out and built an entire mod. And refused payment. He actually learned how to make a model to make a really gorgeous menorah, and put together a stunning range of chanukkiyot so you can, if you want, "light candles" for Chanukkah in your game. (And yes, I actually did this, it was fun.) He put together some wall hangings of the Ten Commandments. He made over a hundred kippah models so you can wear one as long as you have a vanilla hairstyle. The only thing the mod lacks that even the poorest synagogue would try to have, and I have maintenance rights on the mod so when I learn to make models I'll be adding it, is a sefer Torah.

(Ironically, there is no Magen David. But since you can put up a literal actual menorah, that point is moot.)

People are kind. People are good. You just have to find them.

As a baby teen who didn't know she was gay, it was the asexual community that taught me;

- Intimacy doesn't have to mean sex.
- I don't have to have sex if I don't want to. I don't have to have sex full stop!
- I can love boys and not want to have sex with them.
- I should trust my gut on what I do and don't want to do.
- I can picture a future that isn't marrying a man. I can picture a future that doesn't involve marrying anyone. I can picture whatever future I want and then I can go get it.
- I don't need an iron clad justification to say no to things. I can just, not want to.

and most generally, most importantly:

- My comfort matters. I don't have to force myself to do ANYTHING that makes me uncomfortable!! If a situation, a relationship, or a vision of the future makes me uncomfortable! I can ditch it!

I don't know how long it would have taken me to find my home in the queer community without asexuality. I can never thank the asexual community too much for me you helped me be.

So I'm sending mad love and respect to all asexuals and aromantics this fine ace awareness week. May your lives be filled with joy and comfort. May your communities flourish forever. 🖤 🤍 💜

The creator of what was probably the Mary Sue Litmus Test back in the day has disavowed the term/test and doesn't mince words about why.

!!! READ THIS FIRST !!!

I am no longer supporting this test, nor do I support using the term "Mary Sue" to describe any character for any reason. The test is simply here for archival purposes and to provide this message to anyone who follows a link to this page. Instead of using it, please go to "Does My Character Work Okay?" - How To Tell For Yourself!. This article streamlines everything into eleven simple questions that cut straight to the core issues.

If you still really really really want to use this test for some reason, please at least stop using the term "Mary Sue." There are far better ways to talk about characters who just don't work for one reason or another than using a term that's more often than not just used to tear down female characters simply for having a prominent, active role in a story.

The Universal Mary Sue Litmus Test

READ THE INSTRUCTIONS FIRST AND READ THEM CAREFULLY - MISUSE OF THIS TEST WILL CAUSE INACCURATE RESULTS!

yourocdoeswhat

I was gonna just talk in the tags but I changed my mind because I have some stuff to say.

This test? The Mary Sue Litmus Test? I used this religiously. I would make a new character and then run them through this like my life depended on it. I was thirteen, and I thought that if my characters were Mary-Sues then no one would take me seriously. I bought totally into the popular idea that any woman who had more than two talents was a Mary-Sue. I was convinced that I was better than those other people who had OC's that I saw as Mary-Sues. I would look at examples of Mary-Sues and try to avoid them, even if they were characters that I personally loved. I didn't even need to click that link. I still had it bookmarked in my 'writing' bookmark folder from seven years ago.

It drove me to change my first ever OC's. I was thirteen. Thirteen! I was an 8th grader in middle school utterly terrified of people seeing my sexy demon OC or my pretty immortal OC or my cool freedom fighter OC and the first thing they'd think was that they were too good. The culture around (mostly women) original characters needing to be watered down or having to have the character's (mostly women's) skills and talents justified were toxic as hell to me, and I'm sure to others.

Seeing this today was a major blast from the past, and I'm so glad that the creator changed their outlook on this whole thing. I hope that disclaimer will ward off another creative eighth-grader before they get tricked into buying into the shame culture that forms around the creation of original characters.

yourocdoeswhat Follow

Keep seeing a few points getting brought up in the notes:

1. The test specifies that if a thing is normal for your setting you don't count it. (true, I'll give you that)
2. It's pretty hard to get a character to the high levels of Mary-Sue (incorrect, many characters in popular media score high, and so did my characters when I was younger)
3. If the score is low the test will say that's just as bad as if it were high (it's virtually impossible to do this)

Even the creator knows the quiz is harmful, and so is the idea of a Mary-Sue.

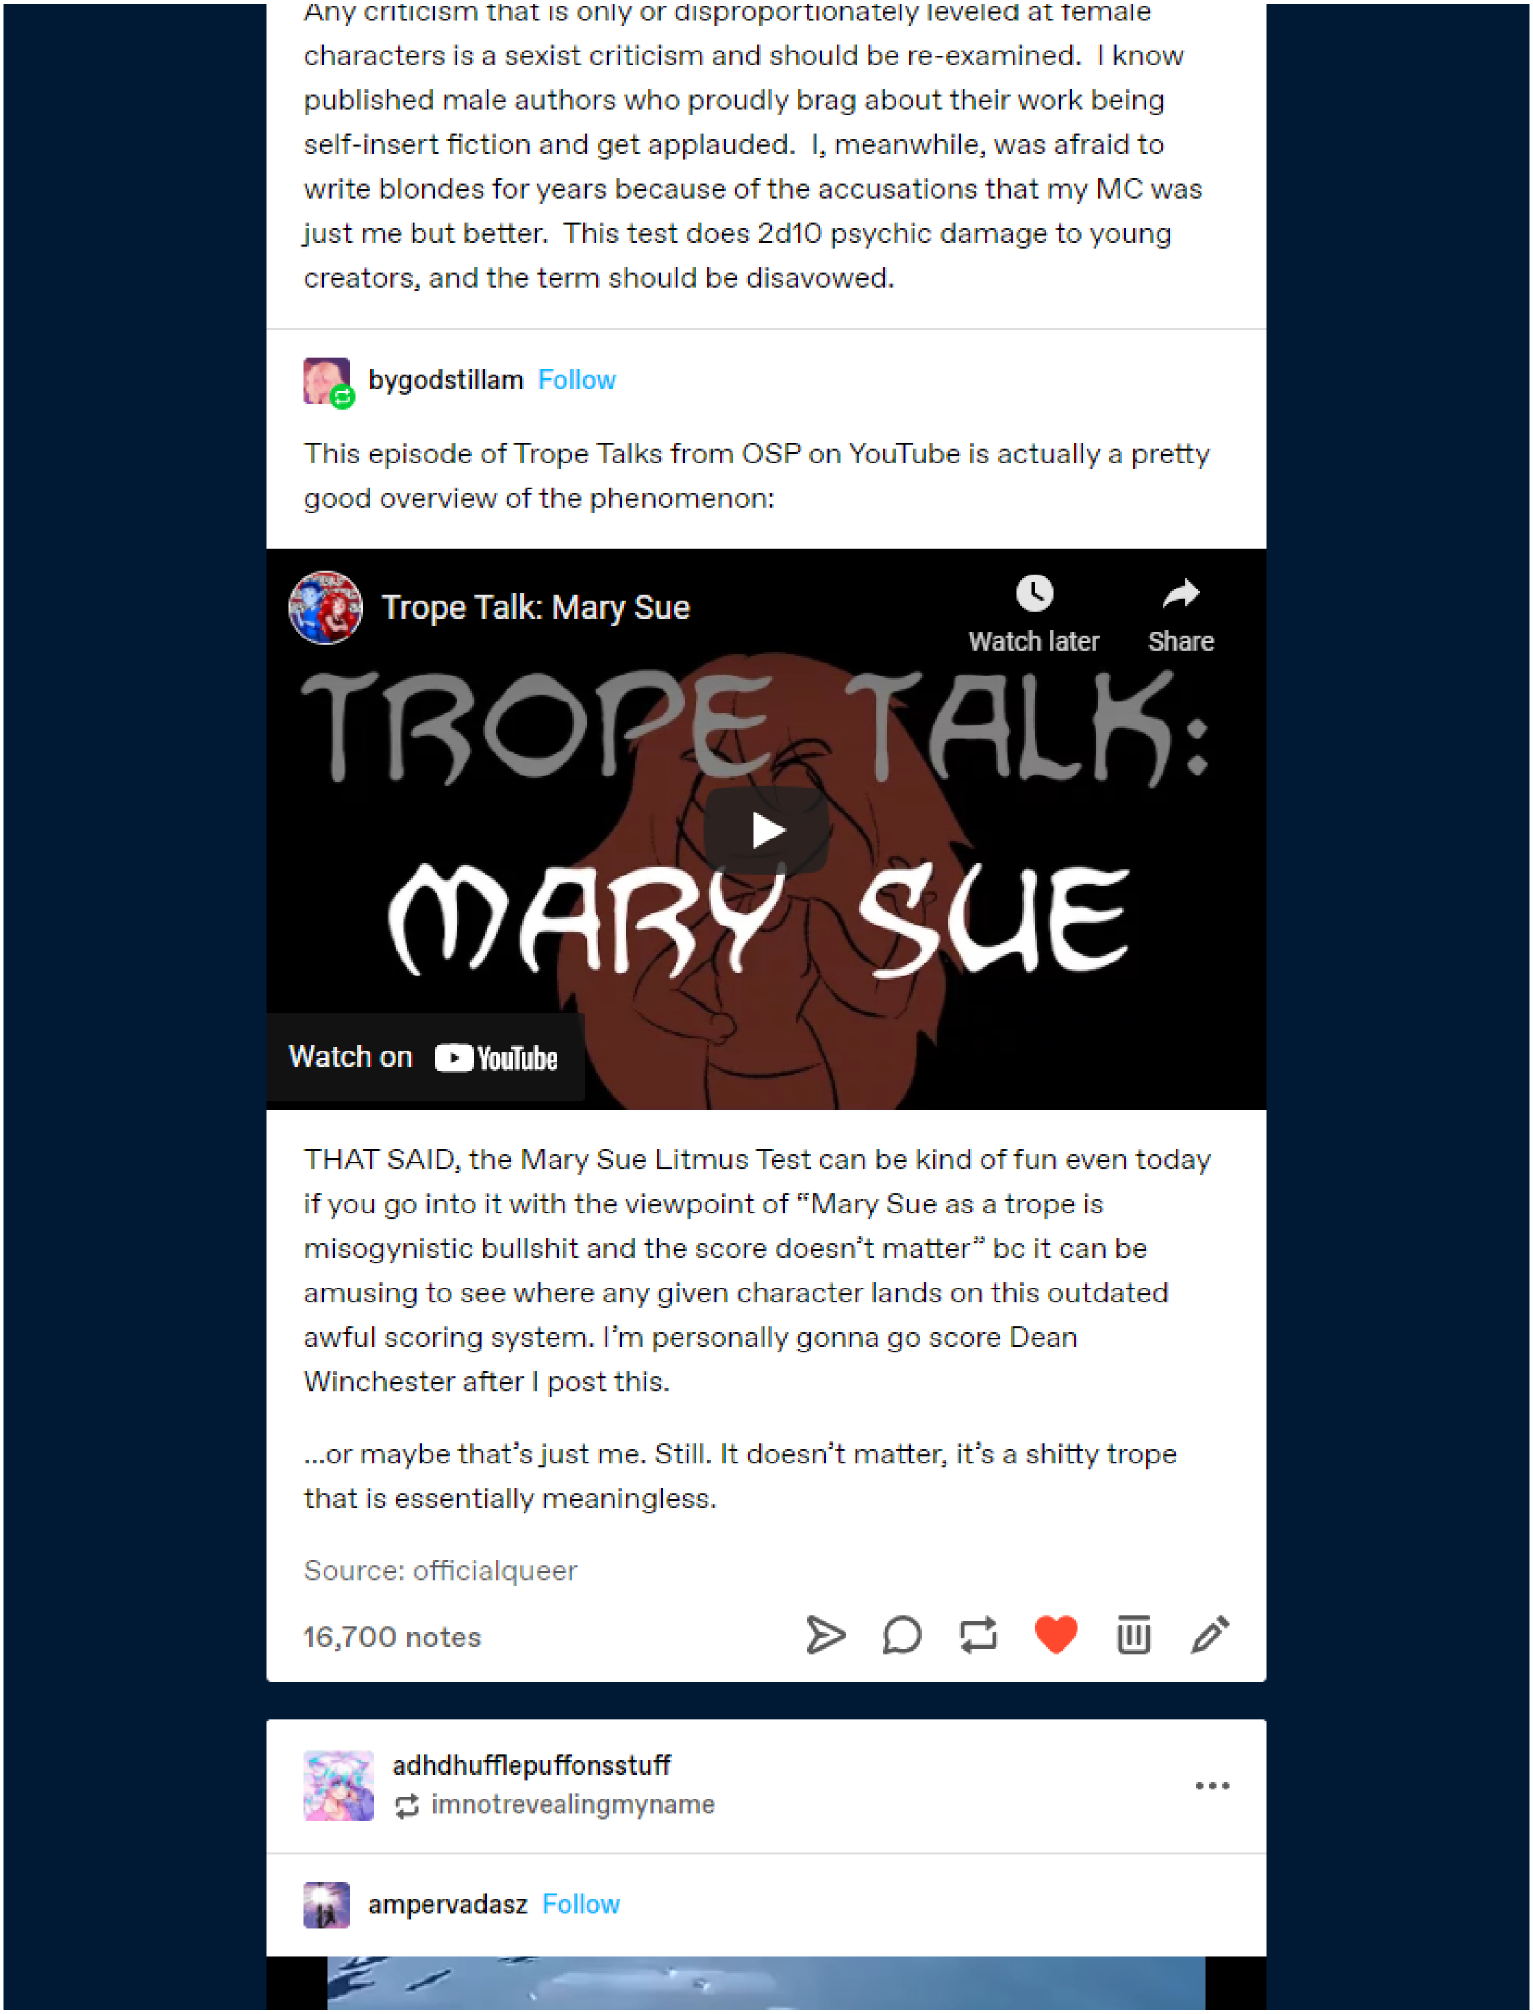
The point is that young creators who want to make powerful, fun, beautiful, and universe-breaking original characters found this quiz and been led to think there's something wrong with their characters. That there's something wrong with them for writing it. This is my personal experience.

And I want to say the experience of being young and writing overpowered characters who are right about everything is a natural process of learning to write. There is nothing wrong with this process.

videogamelover99 Follow

As someone who used to write Mary Sue's....it's never about the character themselves as much as how the canon characters act around them. If the canon characters are ooc without it being purposeful, then like...that's just not learning yet how to write character relationships well. There's nothing wrong with having overpowered characters. Go nuts.

seananmcguire Follow



Any criticism that is only or disproportionately leveled at female characters is a sexist criticism and should be re-examined. I know published male authors who proudly brag about their work being self-insert fiction and get applauded. I, meanwhile, was afraid to write blondes for years because of the accusations that my MC was just me but better. This test does 2d10 psychic damage to young creators, and the term should be disavowed.

bygodstillam Follow

This episode of Trope Talks from OSP on YouTube is actually a pretty good overview of the phenomenon:

THAT SAID, the Mary Sue Litmus Test can be kind of fun even today if you go into it with the viewpoint of "Mary Sue as a trope is misogynistic bullshit and the score doesn't matter" bc it can be amusing to see where any given character lands on this outdated awful scoring system. I'm personally gonna go score Dean Winchester after I post this.

...or maybe that's just me. Still. It doesn't matter, it's a shitty trope that is essentially meaningless.

I'm not good with the science of this or anything (someone who knows more feel free to add) but fish can play??? Fish can play like any other animal?? People saying it couldn't breathe, do human kids not hold their breaths to go under water for fun? It's just the opposite. Air is water, water is air. In the same vein as a kid being thrown up and into the pool and enjoying it, the fish is playing.

shiekah Follow

okay… as someone who studies marine biology I need to clarify something:

fish are unable to hold their breaths. They literally cannot take a deep breath like mammals do.

We have lungs that can take in a specific volume of air, fish have gills that work when they are ventilated enough. There are different kinds of gills, yes. Some fish have something called 'operculum' which is like a cap on top of the gills, helping to protect them and increasing the water circulation through the gills. Some fish DONT have this structure and need to swim in order to be able to breathe.

But the fact that they cannot hold their breaths doesnt mean that they cannot survive without water for a while - in fact, fish can (usually) survive being without water WAY LONGER than we could survive being without air.

I cannot tell if this fish does this for fun, but it sure looks like it. But I am not a behavioural biologist, so I can't tell for sure.

dovewithscales Follow

It is abundantly clear the fish is a willing participant. It's sort of arrogant to assume animals other than humans don't play like humans.

slimedivine Follow

Im not a behavior biologist either, but I have spent a lot of time around fish and ive spent a lot of time talking to and helping people that care for fish. (Former petstore fish guy that took his job too seriously)

That fish is having fun, and fish absolutely DO have fun!

There was a regular who came into the store I worked at a lot, and he kept several varieties of chichlids, a very smart, aggressive type of fish.

He would come in and talk to me about all the drama his fish get into. The different territorial disputes they were having, who had paired off with who, who broke up (yes chichlids are like this)

But he had a jack dempsey in particular that LOVED to chase his hand around the tank, not his wife's hand, not his friend's hand, it HAD to be him. He said that as soon as he entered the room where this fish's tank was kept, the fish would TEAR UP the tank decor, knocking things over and acting a fool off his shits until this dude stuck his hand in there and let the fish chase it around back and forth.

He theorized that his fish learned that if he knocked the tank decor around, his owner would obviously have to stick his hand in to fix it. So when he wants to play "chase dad's hand" thats naturally how he knows he can get the hand to appear. He wont do this behavior for anybody but this one guy and he won't tear up the tank anymore after he had received sufficient "play time", usually once a day when the guy got home from work. He likened it to having a dog that wont leave you alone till you play tug o war for a bit.

I had a betta that would spend twenty minutes at a time just swimming up to the waterfall of the filter, letting it push him down to the bottom of the tank, only to swim back up and do it again, like it was a fucking slide.

Bettas are weak swimmers, and they dislike strong currents, but this guy was using the filter current like a slide. Kinda like how we don't really like getting thrown around, but we still enjoy rollercoasters.

I also have countless stories about goldfish trying to "give hugs" (re: shove themselves into their owners hands during tank maintenance)

My betta knows how to lie and he will only beg for food in front of those he knows have not fed him yet.

There is so much evidence I've seen that fish are waaaay smarter and affectionate than we think. They absolutely have fun and I honestly don't think enough studies have been done on fish brains and fish behavior in general.

And honestly, having worked in a pet store, fish are generally treated like they don't have brains by even the fish care brands that claim expert knowledge.

Its definitely worth noting that hard scientific evidence presenting that the very opposite is true would probably lead to more robust animal welfare laws that would definitely upset the aquatics industry. Food for thought.

I think you're absolutely right on that last point. The misconception that fish are too thoughtless to have feelings facilitates the abhorrent conditions in which they are kept and ways they are treated by the industry.

I used to have a lovely tank, I think it was 50 gallons, and among other things I kept glass catfish. All the research at the time said they were hard to keep in captivity and prone to refusing to eat and starving themselves, and that they did not live long in captivity. But I was fascinated and had to try it. It took me about three days to realize none of the literature said a word about them being nocturnal. I started feeding them at night right before bed, and had zero problems getting them to eat, saw they were incredibly active as soon as the lights went off (I have exceptional night vision) and I kept them in excellent health for years. Exponentially beyond their captive life expectancy life expectancy.

I think the commercial pet fish trade is abysmal in terms of actual working knowledge of fish.

kedreeva

Fish Intelligence (a link at which you will also learn there is a fish called the bony-eared assfish) has been studied on a pretty broad scale, actually and there's a lot of scientific evidence to suggest that they are very smart creatures.

imnotrevealingmyname

Can confirm. Fish owner here, I've had em since I was six, and they go nuts when you show any affection. They'll do crazy stuff that'll freak you out, often to the point where you get so worried you take them to the vet, but it turns it's their idea of fun. They're awesome ❤

This poem really has strong Loki energy.

And only where the forest fires have sped,
Scorching relentlessly the cool north lands,
A sweet wild flower lifts its purple head,
And, like some gentle spirit sorrow-fed,
It hides the scars with almost human hands.

And only to the heart that knows of grief,
Of desolating fire, of human pain,
There comes some purifying sweet belief,
Some fellow-feeling beautiful, if brief.
And life revives, and blossoms once again.

Iduna being rewarded by the spirits for saving the son of her oppressor feels very "Pocahontas saving John Smith" to me. Very "Squanto saving the Pilgrims."

It's a pattern I remember experiencing often in elementary school - the celebration of the indigenous person who acts as "helper" to the settlers - singling out distorted/mythologized depictions of Pocahontas, of Sacajawea, of Squanto because they "aided" the white people my elementary school narrative was implicitly far more invested in.

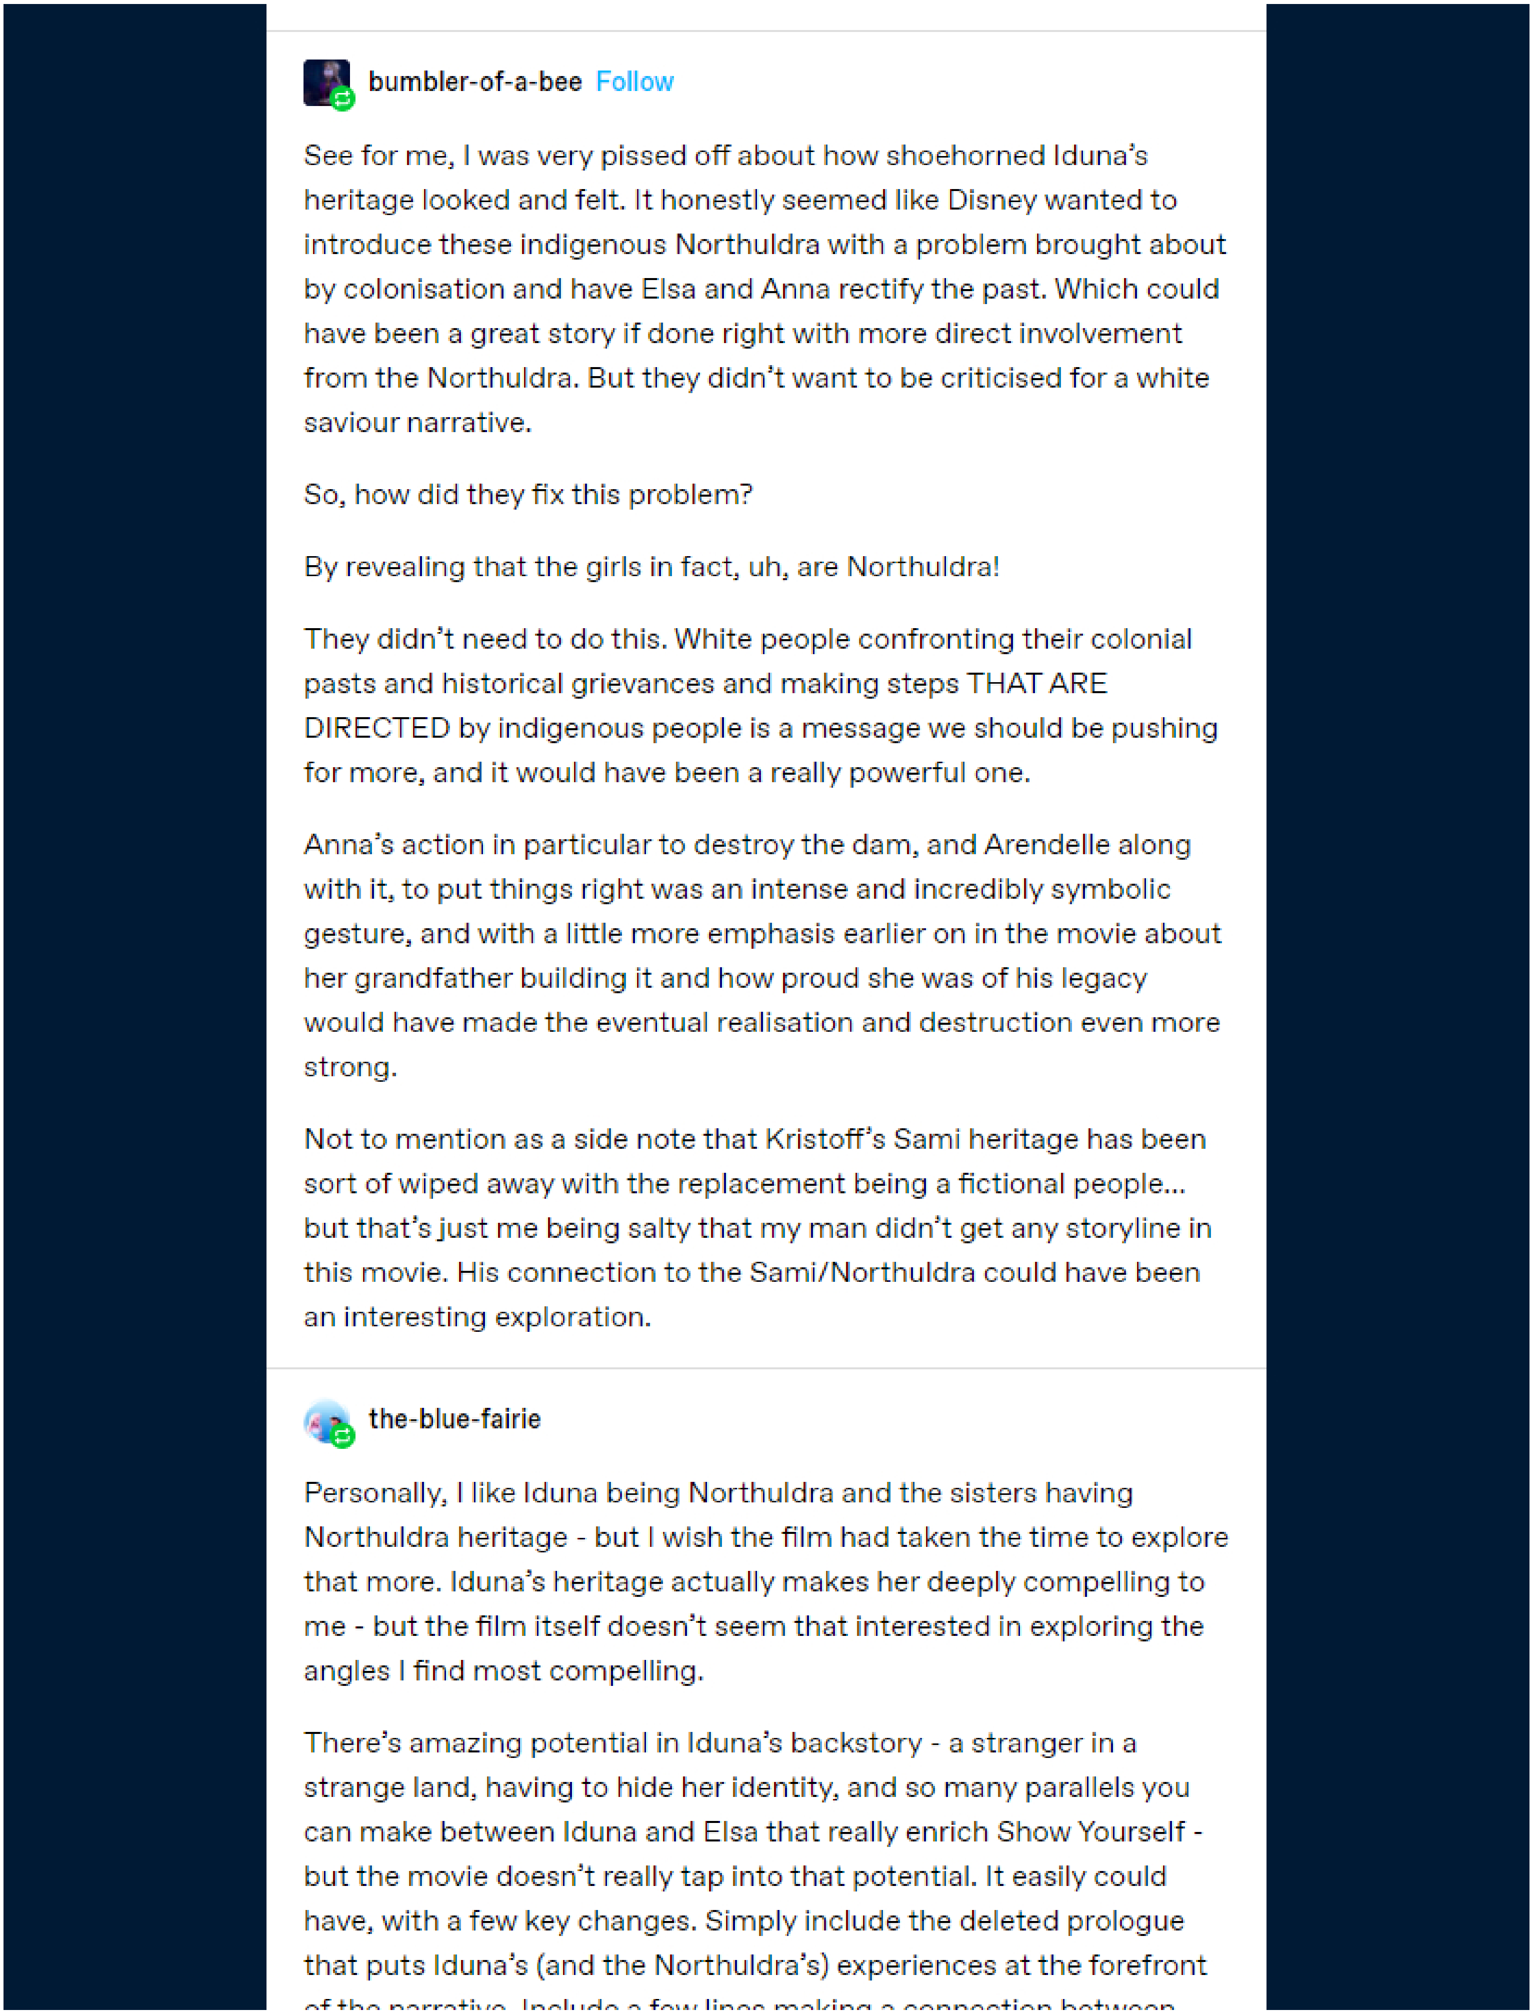
And again, this has nothing to do with Agnarr as an individual. Agnarr as an individual is warm, loving, tender, and wonderful. This isn't about individuals.

This is about how the specific choice of Iduna's good deed feels... odd. The moment the film glorifies for the birth of Elsa's powers, the moment that becomes tied to the new statue in Arendelle and the notion of being "united by love" is... an indigenous girl saving the life of someone among her oppressors - a fellow child, yes... a good person, yes. But again, this isn't about individuals.

It's about the broader concepts and assumptions at play within the narrative.

It doesn't negate the good the film does. Elsa's confrontation with the memory of Runeard is raw and powerful and AMAZING. Elsa reaching out to stop the blade is equally breathtaking. Anna's conviction to destroy the dam and wash Arendelle away is awe-inspiring.

But it does complicate things and feel like the white writers falling into a pattern I was inculcated with myself as a white child in a U.S elementary school.



bumbler-of-a-bee Follow

See for me, I was very pissed off about how shoehorned Iduna's heritage looked and felt. It honestly seemed like Disney wanted to introduce these indigenous Northuldra with a problem brought about by colonisation and have Elsa and Anna rectify the past. Which could have been a great story if done right with more direct involvement from the Northuldra. But they didn't want to be criticised for a white saviour narrative.

So, how did they fix this problem?

By revealing that the girls in fact, uh, are Northuldra!

They didn't need to do this. White people confronting their colonial pasts and historical grievances and making steps THAT ARE DIRECTED by indigenous people is a message we should be pushing for more, and it would have been a really powerful one.

Anna's action in particular to destroy the dam, and Arendelle along with it, to put things right was an intense and incredibly symbolic gesture, and with a little more emphasis earlier on in the movie about her grandfather building it and how proud she was of his legacy would have made the eventual realisation and destruction even more strong.

Not to mention as a side note that Kristoff's Sami heritage has been sort of wiped away with the replacement being a fictional people... but that's just me being salty that my man didn't get any storyline in this movie. His connection to the Sami/Northuldra could have been an interesting exploration.

the-blue-fairie

Personally, I like Iduna being Northuldra and the sisters having Northuldra heritage - but I wish the film had taken the time to explore that more. Iduna's heritage actually makes her deeply compelling to me - but the film itself doesn't seem that interested in exploring the angles I find most compelling.

There's amazing potential in Iduna's backstory - a stranger in a strange land, having to hide her identity, and so many parallels you can make between Iduna and Elsa that really enrich Show Yourself - but the movie doesn't really tap into that potential. It easily could have, with a few key changes. Simply include the deleted prologue that puts Iduna's (and the Northuldra's) experiences at the forefront of the narrative. Include a few lines making a connection between of the narrative. Include a few lines making a connection between Iduna's experiences and Elsa's.

And that's just minor tweaks to the framework the film already gives us. A wider overhaul of the film could expand Elsa's and Anna's connections to the Northuldra (tell us more about their feelings about this revelation! tell us more about how Anna feels about this; I know we're trying to reinforce her connection to Arendelle, but let her interact with the Northuldra more - her face during the vuelie scene is exultant - build upon that!), give more screentime to the Northuldra characters, and so forth.

Iduna's and Elsa's and Anna's Northuldra heritage could be the beating heart of the film! The elements are all there. The film just... doesn't seem to want to emphasize those elements, for whatever reason!

Of course, "white people confronting their colonial pasts and historical grievances and making steps THAT ARE DIRECTED by indigenous people" is also a great message, especially if we expand the Northuldra's role to give them more direct involvement.

I'm just defending the Northuldra heritage plot element because it has such amazing story potential (the vuelie scene is one of the best of F2) and I love how it enriches Iduna.

But again, it enriches Iduna conceptually. The actual handling of her backstory in the film (especially when you cut out the prologue from her perspective and you celebrate her for saving one among her oppressors) kind of undermines all that potential.

Ahhhh Frozen 2, you fascinatingly interesting and sometimes horribly frustrating mixed bag!

themountainsays Follow

Personally, I really love that Frozen 2 added the Northuldra heritage to the royal family, for multiple reasons ~~some of which are not even personal lmao.~~ As Liza mentions, it mostly remains as conceptual potential and i'm quite frustrated that the movie didn't build on that. However, the "forced diversity" argument always rubbed me the wrong way, partially because I never felt more represented by the movie before but also, on a less personal note, because I find it frustrating when people see it as Disney grabbing a bunch of white settlers and slapping an "arctic native" label on them to claim it's ok, that the White Savior aspects of the movie as just fiiiiiiine. They see it that way, rather than taking canon as a whole text and not as multiple phases that conflict with each other. They don't always see it as the second installment further expanding on the gaps and blanks the first movie left. Of course Iduna wasn't originally intended to be indigenous, but obviously the films don't expect you to interpret the text as "Iduna and her daughters were white settlers, now they are actually indigenous", but rather, as "Iduna has always been indigenous in-universe, her story has always been there even if it hadn't been told until now, and her daughters always had this heritage hidden from them". I firmly believe this way to interpret the additions made by Frozen 2 is the best way to read the text, because it's the most logical way to view it, because it's how the authors intended it to be seen, and because I also think it's the one that lends to the better story (again, because it was written to function in this way). One of my favorite things that the Frozen 2 additions does to the franchise is to recontextualize the events of Frozen 1. Knowing that Elsa's mother is Northuldra, that her magic steems from this origin, that the Northuldra and the magic from their homeland has historically been opressed by the same country persecuting Elsa and that her mother lived similar experiences to hers... It turns Frozen 1 into a different movie.

And one last thing: yes, you could say these are benefits and good, rich, interesting additions that Frozen 2 brings to the table, but that they're still ultimately unecessary. You could say that the Frozen franchise, while it doesn't suffer from the additions of Frozen 2, didn't need a recontextualization, didn't need the new lore or more worldbuilding. That these additions don't fill any important gaps left by the first movie, only the ones we didn't actually care about, like where Agnarr and Iduna's ship was heading or why it sank, of Iduna's full backstory.

But... here's what I think. The writers seemed particularly interested in exploring the reason behind Elsa's powers, which is a decision I don't personally agree with. But... of all the options they could have chosen, of all the reasons or paths they could have decided on... I believe going for the lost heritage was one of the only that were actually good. Because it's something that's important but it is hidden from you, and you may not learn about it until you're older and it fits so perfectly with the politics and social issues previously stablished by the Frozen universe, that it practically writes itself: the Northuldra were familiar with magic and didn't try to suppress it's nature. The Arendellian crown sought to control nature and suppress magic. Later, in Frozen 1, the Arendellian people are horribly averse to magic and persecute Elsa and we don't really know why, other than they fear magic even though it is... her nature. Eventually, we learn than unconditional love and freedom to let her be herself is the right answer. And in Frozen 2, we learn that the protagonists come from a culture that would have been so much kinder to them, where they could have grown up surrounded by love and freedom and acceptance but it was denied to them, by the crimes of the same royal house that instilled the initial fear of magic, of forces that a National State cannot subjugate. If the writers wanted to expand on Elsa's powers, what they mean and where they came from, then this direction is, in my opinion, conceptually perfect. I don't even want to complain about explaining the magic, a major pet peeve of mine. It's only problem is that it lends itself to the Magical Native trope a bit too much, which made me cringe at the theater. I don't know if there's a way to avoid this trope while maintaining the thematic implications of this story intact. I hope there is. It's… a tightrope.

Now, the execution leaves a lot to be desired. Yes, I agree with that. Yes, i'm mad too. Yes, I write fanfiction to fix Disney's mess. These thematic implications, while obvious (imo) if you think about them for a while, are not explicitly stated in the text. The film certainly doesn't give the Northuldra neither the screentime nor the agency they deserve, and this isn't even a story about reconnection to your indigenous culture. People don't care about Anna and Elsa's heritage because Disney doesn't care about it either. They don't see it's importance because the writers didn't bother to make the most obvious statement that would come from this situation. I could spend hours complaining about the execution and delivery of Frozen 2's themes. What this movie needed was one or two more drafts before being animated, to smooth things over and organize it's themes a bit better.

But I've seen people claim the concept itself should have never been brought up at the writing table in the first place. That the mere idea of Iduna being indigenous shouldn't have been suggested let alone added to the film, that it's malicious at its core because the writers could only have possibly added it to soften the White Savior blow. I've even seen people argue that indigenous people shouldn't be in the Frozen franchise and that Disney is just trying to be woke??? Yeah, it's all over the place. And while the execution is oh so frustrating, I think the concept is wonderful and truly worthy of being defended, so I wanted to take my time to see if I could put my thoughts into words.

Sorry Liza for hijacking your post! 😅 I couldn't help myself.

the-blue-fairie

Don't worry, I LOVE all your thoughts! Especially when you're defending the concept of the heritage plot point! But also, yeah, my original post wasn't even ABOUT the heritage plot point (either in concept or execution.) It was about how Elsa's powers are connected by the text of the film to the "good deed" of Iduna saving an Arendellian. And how having the ultimate act of goodness that convinces the spirits to gift Iduna with Elsa be… her saving an Arendellian… has.. ramifications.
